3. That we heartily endorse the Emancipation Proclamation of President Lincoln, because it strikes at that baleful cause of all our civil and ecclesiastical difficulties—American slavery—"the sum of all villainies," the darling idol of villains, the central power of villainous secessionism, but now, by the wisdom of the President, about to be made the agent of retributive justice in punishing that culmination of villainous enterprises, the attempt to overthrow the most glorious civil government that God's providence ever established upon earth.

4. That we earnestly deprecate all dissensions and divisions among those who profess loyalty to the Government and to our free institutions: and that we deem it sinful, at least, if not strong evidence, of sympathy with our enemies, when men in our midst attempt to create such divisions or dissensions upon any pretext whatsoever.

5. That a committee be appointed to address the President of the United States, and express to him, in the name of the Methodist Protestant Church, the sentiments of loyalty contained in these resolutions, and to assure him that our people endorse his Proclamation, sustain the war, and are ready to do and suffer all things necessary for the maintenance of our glorious Government intact.

The Annual Conference at Pittsburg, September, 1864, unanimously adopted these resolutions:

Resolved, That this Conference does hereby declare its loyalty to the Government of the United States, and its approval of the Administration of Abraham Lincoln in his efforts to overthrow the rebellion and maintain the cause of the Union.

Resolved, That whatever may have been the design of the slaveholders of the South in bringing on this great rebellion, in our judgment, God is permitting this war in order to purify this nation from her sins—especially the great sin of slavery, which we hold to have been the main cause of the rebellion.

Resolved, That the Emancipation Proclamation is hereby endorsed by this Conference, and it is our prayer that the President, by judicious management, the power of his armies, and the help of the Almighty, may be able to carry it into practical effect in all the Rebel States.

Resolved, That party politics, in our judgment, should never be allowed to interfere with our allegiance to the Government of our country, and we hereby advise all our people to be faithful to the Administration in all its efforts to maintain the Union, constantly praying for the Government, and the success of our armies.

Resolved, That we desire a peace growing out of the salvation of our Government, based upon the principles of immutable righteousness, in order that the Christian religion may take a firmer hold than heretofore on the American mind.

The Maryland Annual Conference of the Methodist Protestant Church has not made any declaration since the opening of the war. The West Virginia Conference, which was in connection with it, undertook to ascertain its position in March last, with this result, as disclosed in these extracts from the report of the proceedings of the latter body at its meeting in September:

Dr. Lushley, our fraternal Messenger to the last Maryland Annual Conference, submitted his report, which states that owing to severe affliction in his family he was unable to attend said Conference in person, but that he addressed to them a fraternal letter, in which he distinctly set forth the object of his mission, to wit: to ascertain the position occupied by the Maryland Conference in regard to its loyalty to the Government of the United States,—to which he received the following reply:—

BALTIMORE, Maryland, March 21, 1864.

REV. DR. P. T. LAISHLEY—

DEAR BROTHER:—Your official communication as Messenger from the Western Virginia Annual Conference, was brought under the respectful consideration of the Maryland Annual Conference at its recent session in this city, and I was commissioned to answer it to the following effect:

We, as an Annual Conference, express our profound sympathy with Dr. Lushley in the sore affliction of his daughters, which, with some other uncontrollable circumstances, has deprived both him and the Conference of the desired and expected pleasure of fraternal greetings; and we hereby extend to Dr. Laishley and the Conference he represents our warm expression of Christian sympathy and affection and our prayers for their continued prosperity as an effectual agency in spreading spiritual holiness through our land. It was also determined to send a fraternal Messenger to the Western Virginia Conference at its Annual Session in September next.

I shall be happy to hear, my beloved brother, that your afflicted child is mercifully spared to you, and restored to the enjoyment of comfortable health.

With these sentiments, I am, most truly,

Yours in Christ,

F. WATERS.

The above letter was referred to a Committee, who submitted the following report, which was adopted:

We appreciate most cheerfully the expression of sympathy and affection set forth in said letter, but are grieved that the Conference did not think proper in its judgment to put us in possession of the information we so earnestly desired, to wit: the position occupied by the Conference in regard to its loyalty to the Government of the United States, and furthermore declare that we cannot affiliate or hold official connection with any Conference which is not outspoken on a subject of such vital importance, or which will not condescend to gratify us so far as to inform us whether it is for or against the Government, when treason threatens its destruction. Could we have been satisfied that the Maryland Conference as a body gave her sympathies and influence to the Government under which we live, it would have afforded us great pleasure to have continued in official connection with her; but for the want of such an expression on her part, we have to adopt the language of the Master and say, "They who are not with us are against us."

The West Virginia Conference now holds connection with the Methodist Protestant Conferences of the Western, Northern, and Eastern States.

Of the proceedings of the Maryland Conference referred to, these have relation to the expected communication from the West Virginia Conference:

Rev. L. W. Bates offered this resolution, which was adopted:

Resolved, That in accordance with the suggestion of the President, (Rev. James K. Nichols,) in his executive paper, a committee of three ministers and delegates be appointed, whose duty it shall be to confer with all visitors having business with the Conference, and to decide whether and when those of them who wish to address the Conference shall be privileged to do so; and all communications not strictly belonging to the regular and annual business of the Conference, shall be referred to said committee.

Rev. Dr. F. Waters, Rev. L. W. Bates, Rev. T. D. Valiant, George Vickers, Esq., and L. J. Cox, Esq., were appointed on that Committee. On a subsequent day, it was announced to the Conference that a letter had been received from Rev. Dr. P. T. Laishley, appointed fraternal Messenger from the West Virginia Conference. The letter was not read in open Conference, but immediately referred to the committee aforesaid, and in relation to it the committee reported, on the same day, as follows:

A communication was received from Dr. P. T. Laishley, Messenger from West Virginia Conference, expressing his regret at not being able, owing to sickness in his family and other unfavorable circumstances, to visit our Conference.

The Committee recommend that the Conference express its sympathy for Dr. Laishley in the affliction of his daughter, which has deprived both him and the Conference of the pleasure of fraternal greetings, and that we extend to Dr. Laishley and the Conference he represents, our warm expression of Christian sympathy and affection, and our prayers for their continued prosperity as an efficient instrumentality in spreading scriptural holiness through our Land.

We further recommend, that the Conference elect a Messenger to visit the next session of West Virginia Conference, to be held in Fairmont, Va., in September, 1864.

And that a committee be appointed to address a letter to Bro. Laishley, expressing to him the above sentiments of our Conference.

F. WATERS,
GEO. VICKERS,
T. D. VALIANT,
L. W. BATES,
L. J. COX, JR.

On motion, Dr. F. Waters was appointed the committee named in the above report.

A number of the Ministers in this Conference are known to disapprove of the silence of the Conference, and to regret deeply the position it is thus made to occupy, and who, in their respective spheres of duty, urge the duty of maintaining the National authority and suppressing the Rebellion. Subjoined are the resolutions adopted in March, 1864, by the Ninth Street Methodist Protestant Church, Washington City:

Mr. Blackiston offered the following resolutions, and moved their adoption:

Whereas an opinion expressed that this church is virtually an organized society of religious sympathizers with rebellion has gained believers in the community; and whereas a strict adherence to the adopted silence on such matters, as a church, gives reasons for rebel sympathizers to hope that the assertion is true, and for loyal men to doubt the loyalty of the members of the church: Therefore be it

Resolved, That justice to ourselves and our brethren demands of us a full expression of our loyalty at this time.

Resolved, That in our opinion the rebellion, which has flooded the valleys and plains of the South and West with blood, is treasonable, wicked, and ought to be crushed, and the leaders punished as traitors.

Resolved, That we of Ninth street station have no sympathy with those engaged openly in the rebellion, and less with those who, while they are amassing fortunes from the Government, are secretly giving aid and comfort to its enemies.

Resolved, That though we may admire the talents and commend the zeal of every minister of the Conference, we consider no minister as acceptable to the Ninth street pulpit, against whose loyalty there is the slightest reason for doubt.

Resolved, That the Secretary is hereby ordered to prepare a copy of these resolutions and sign them; the chairman is hereby ordered to countersign them; and the delegate to the Maryland Annual Conference is hereby ordered to present them to the President of that body.

Rev. J. T. Ward is pastor, succeeding Rev. C. T. Cochel.

FREE METHODIST.

NEW YORK CONFERENCE OF THE FREE METHODIST CHURCH, 1864.

September—The body met at Akron, 29th and 30 h, and October 1st, and adopted the following preamble and resolution:

We are men of peace. Our Master, whom we supremely love and endeavor to serve, is the Prince of Peace. He has taught us to love our enemies and to do good as far as possible to all mankind. But he has also taught us that "the magistrate beareth not the sword in vain." He is to be a terror to evil doers; but how can this be if the laws against crime are not executed? And how can they be executed without the exercise of physical force? If force may be used to execute the laws against a single highwayman, may it not be against a band of criminals who set the laws at defiance? Does the magnitude of a conspiracy against just laws and the common rights of humanity, render the employment of whatever force, for whatever time may be necessary for its suppression, unchristian and wrong? Is it right to punish petit larceny, and wrong to punish murder? If not, then is the effort to suppress by force of arms this wicked rebellion, still existing in this country, entirely consistent with the Christian religion. Humanity demands that the rebellion be put down, no matter how great may be the expenditure of blood and treasure necessary to secure its overthrow. The fate of the ambitious, unscrupulous men who, because deprived, in a perfectly proper and legal manner, of the patronage of the Government, which they had invariably used for the spread and perpetuation of human bondage, have conspired for the overthrow of the Nation, and who, in endeavoring to carry out their nefarious schemes, have deluged the land with blood and multiplied widows and orphans in all our borders, should stand upon the page of history as a warning to conspirators against the rights of men in all future ages.

In common with our fellow citizens we feel the burdens of this terrible struggle for national existence and the rights of humanity. We enjoy no immunity from the perils it involves. Some of the preachers of our denomination have bravely led their men upon the field of battle, and have nobly fallen in the sanguinary strife. Our brothers and our sons are still at the post of danger, or have laid down their lives for our beloved country. Should the war continue, we are liable to be called upon to follow their example. As Christians and as men we deprecate this great effusion of blood, and we devoutly and unitedly pray for the return of peace. But we would have a peace that promises to be permanent in its character and beneficial in its results: Therefore

Resolved, That as much as we deprecate the suffering caused by the civil war now raging in our land, we have no desire to have it stop until the rebellion is thoroughly subdued and Slavery, its guilty cause, is completely and forever extinguished in all our borders.

Resolved, That while we keep ourselves aloof from all party strife, we do most cordially sustain the Government in its efforts to subdue the rebellion, and especially in the emancipation policy; and we trust it will go on in the same direction until all their rights as men are restored to the colored race.

Resolved, That, while we do not believe in any unnecessary intermeddling with the political opinions of individuals, yet we do not see how any who sympathize with slaveholding and with the slave-holders' rebellion can consistently belong to the Free Methodist Church, or, indeed, to any religious body professing to be governed by the principles of the New Testament.

Resolved, That we render devout thanksgiving to God for the recent victories he has given our armies, and we will devoutly pray the Lord of Hosts to continue His interpositions in behalf of our nation, and give success to our arms, and restore peace and prosperity to our land, and establish our free institutions on the firm foundation of universal righteousness and justice.

B. T. ROBERTS,
Chairman of Committee.

EVANGELICAL ASSOCIATION.

GENERAL CONFERENCE OF THE EVANGELICAL ASSOCIATION, 1863.

October 1—The body met in Buffalo.

October 19—The Committee on the State of the Country made two reports, as follows:

MAJORITY REPORT.

Your Committee has the honor to lay the following report on the State of the Country before the Conference for consideration:

The great truth that God governs the world, and in his providence presides over the destinies of man, is not only founded on his Being and attributes, but it also stands legibly entamped on every page of the History of the Human Race, and it cannot be misrepresented that the Supreme Ruler has, in all the alternations, in the struggle raging between the powers of light and darkness, ever since the Fall, so directed the course of events, that each of them brought man nearer the great end of his destination, viz: the emancipation from the dominion of evil, and the investiture of all with an equal title to the enjoyment of life, liberty and happiness.

The present inexcusable and unholy rebellion, that is now raging in our land, is nothing less than the expression and the outward appearance of the great world-wide struggle between the forever inalienable rights of mankind, on the one hand, and the unrighteousness of falsehood and tyranny on the other; in the status into which this world struggle, under the immediate righteous government of God, and the special elements of our national existence, has entered, and where both antagonistic powers are more fully expressed, and stand opposed to each other in a more rugged form, than has been the case heretofore of the theatre of history;—here, where for more than two hundred years, Liberty has found an asylum in the wilderness against the despotic oppression and papal persecutions of Europe—where the God-confiding Pilgrim Fathers, a company of persecuted Protestant Christians, laid the cornerstone of this republic, and its glorious institutions of "Liberty and Equality," according to the principles of the Holy Scriptures, for futurity—here, where in later years, the brave sons of these worthy ancestors, have laid this divinely selected foundation stone, reared on it the ideal of social, civil, and religious societies of all nations, (under a never before enjoyed measure of Heavenly favor,) and perfected, in a never before known greatness;—here, where, through the help of God with a strong arm, thus wrested from the grasp of Despotism, consecrated with their own blood, one of the best human governments that ever existed, and with it a country that should become a place of secure refuge for all the oppressed of the earth; but where Satan, the arch enemy of God and man, planted the upas of Slavery and man-brutalization, this excrescence of hell and sum total of all meanness and villainy, and through the poisonous curse to subvert this heritage of free men, to be made the stage of unheard-of abominations and sufferings, the burying-place of pure religion, liberty, and civilization, and, indeed the hopes of the world; and where further men who at the price of all higher motives and designs, driven by avarice and lust of power, for more than thirty years, worked according to a well laid plan for the subversion of the Constitution, the dissolution of the Union, and the overthrow of the Government, until at last, on the 12th day of April, 1861, by the first fire on the banner of the stars and stripes on Fort Sumter, made known that they were ready to carry out their treasonable design.

In view of these facts, be it, by us, the delegates of the several annual conferences of the Evangelical Association, in General Conference assembled, on the 19th day of October, A. D. 1863, solemnly

Resolved, 1. That notwithstanding our conviction that war and bloodshed is a terrible evil, and the extremely deplorable consequence of sin, in opposition to the spirit of Christianity, and its existence to be deeply deplored in our so-called Christian land; but inasmuch as the present terrible war raging in our land, was caused by the insurrection of a band of traitors and rebels, against the life and existence of the nation itself, whose chief object is the destruction of liberty, the exaltation of a comparatively small class over the larger—the laboring class, which constitutes the germ of the nation; the dishonoring of labor itself, and the extension and perpetuation of slavery;—in consideration of these undeniable facts it is the imperative duty of our Government, to use the sword entrusted to it of God, in defense of our rights, the execution of the laws, the protection of our free institutions, the maintenance of our forever indissoluble and inseparable Union, in accordance with the Constitution upon which it rests, and finally to punish the rebels against our Government, and it is the holiest duty of every citizen, faithfully to support the Government in the important duties devolving upon the same.

2. Resolved, That we cannot conceal the fact, that only the prevalent deep moral and religious corruption, in all the walks of life, made it possible to inaugurate its bloody struggle; therefore we acknowledge the same as a well-merited chastisement of God, and rebuking admonition to repentance and reformation, which applies particularly to the too worldly-minded church, and upon the heeding of which admonition depends the salvation of our country.

3. Resolved, That a republican form of Government can only exist where the principles of the Christian religion are deeply rooted in common life, and constitute the predominant element, where it is the mission, especially of the Christian ministry, to watch over the Christian religion, that it may not become the handmaid of unscrupulous demagogues or that the free discussion of such questions as relate to the temporal welfare of the people may not be prejudiced, but on the contrary, that the life of the whole nation be pervaded by the spirit and essence of Christianity.

4. Resolved, That we consider the fact, that the peaceable occupations in the Northern States have made undisturbed progress, and rejoice in an extraordinary advance, that the national prosperity and strength of our Government has attained a degree, which it did not reach in the long years of peace, as unmistakable evidences that it is God's gracious design and good will that our nation should come forth tried and purified, and that this Union of states, established on the principles of the Bible, shall be continued, with increased liberties.

5. Resolved, That in the midst of our national convulsion, we behold the indubitable proofs of the favor of God in the fact, that He has given us rulers who, by their able statesmanship, have given their official acknowledgment of the higher Government of God over them, and by their well-tried probity and distinguished administration of the Government, have shown themselves worthy of the undivided confidence of the nation.

6. Resolved, That, as slavery is a social, moral, and civil evil, and the great cause of the present rebellion, we deem its continuance as incompatible with the exalted mission of our nation; and hence look upon the efforts of the present administration to inaugurate measures for its ultimate extinction, as righteous and patriotic; and therefore recognize also the so-called Emancipation Proclamation of the President, in his capacity of Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States, as well as the suspension of the Writ of Habeas Corpus, as constitutional and in the highest degree proper measures for the suppression of the present insurrection.

7. Resolved, That we will not omit, as becoming our office and work, as preachers of the Gospel, to support the Government in every proper measure, which it may employ for the suppression of the rebellion, and the restoration of peace, and that we earnestly exhort all our members, according to the doctrine of the Bible, and profession of religion, to manifest toward the Government reverence, fidelity, and obedience, and not to neglect to pray for the same and the welfare of our country.

8. Resolved, That we consider the political partisanship,—where the interests of the country and religion are made of less importance than party interests, and are sacrificed inconsiderately—as entirely unworthy of a Christian citizen; and therefore urgently admonish our preachers and members to abstain from all such folly.

9. Resolved, That we appreciate the patriotism and bravery of our fellow-citizens, who have sacrificed the comforts of domestic life, and took up arms in defense of their country, and heartily sympathize with them and their families, and remember the sufferings and sacrifices which they have endured for the deliverance of the Union and preservation of the Republic, or may yet endure, that we will support them with word and deed, and will ever remember them in our prayers.

10. Resolved, That we will not omit to call upon God, to pour out His Spirit in an abundant measure upon the Church of our land, and upon the nation in general, that He will redeem our nation from its sin, eradicate its guilt, and speedily grant us a just and permanent peace.

MINORITY REPORT.

Whereas the majority report of the Committee on the state of the country contains expressions which we cannot conscientiously endorse; therefore we submit the following:

Whereas a wicked and causeless rebellion is still raging over a great part of our country, threatening our civil and religious liberties, imperiling the glorious Union of these states, and aiming, as we believe, at the overthrow of our glorious Republic; and

Whereas the Government of the United States, in its efforts to put down this wicked and gigantic insurrection, should have the undivided support of every citizen, who loves his country, and the heaven-born institutions of freedom, bequeathed unto us by our fathers; and

Whereas we recognize the hand of God, in the destinies of all the nations of the earth; therefore,

Resolved, That while we deeply deplore the existence of this fratricidal strife, and the necessity of bloodshed in the maintenance of the Union, nevertheless we believe it to be the duty of the Government to use every legitimate and constitutional means to suppress the abominable spirit of treason, exterminate rebellion, and, by the blessing of God, restore peace and union to our now distracted country.

Resolved, That we conceive it to be the duty of all, especially of every Christian, to sustain the Government in this hour of peril, by prayer, obedience, and every proper means, in its efforts to suppress this cruel rebellion, and to pray that God may grant wisdom to our rulers, and efficiency to our arms.

Resolved, That while we acknowledge God as the Supreme Ruler of the universe, and the Dispenser of the great events of nations, we, at the same time, acknowledge these calamities to be a just chastisement for our national sins, such as ingratitude, Sabbath-desecration, pride, revelry, profanity, infidelity, slavery, &c., and the present conflict, a struggle between the spirit of liberty and despotism; therefore we humbly bow to the chastening rod of the Almighty, confess our sins as a nation, praying that He may in His wrath remember mercy, mitigate the infliction of deserved punishment, and overrule this commotion, that the nation may come forth purified, His name glorified, and His purposes accomplished.

Whereas this terrible struggle has been, and still is fraught, with the loss of property, friends, health, life and limb, bringing distress, sorrow, and mourning into many families, while thousands of our brave fellow-citizens are still undergoing the privations of soldier's life, therefore,

Resolved, That we deeply sympathize with them in their losses and privations, especially with the sick and wounded, and assure them of our prayers, while the patriotic dead shall ever live fresh in our memories.

Whereas Slavery is a great moral, social, and political evil, one of the primary causes of this unreasonable rebellion; therefore,

Resolved, That we disapprove of the entire system of Slavery, and fully endorse the sentiments expressed in our Church Discipline.

Whereas much injury has been done in Christian communities by undue participation in political party strife; therefore,

Resolved, That we deeply regret that some permit themselves to be carried away by such party strife, and indulge in contemptuous epithets, and thereby ferment discord, and alienate brotherly feeling to such a degree that the interests of religion and the country become secondary matters and we hereby disapprove of such conduct as highly culpable and unworthy a Christian and especially a minister.

Whereas in God alone is our help and safety; therefore,

Resolved, That we call upon all Christians, everywhere, to unite with us in giving thanks to our great Benefactor for the many tokens of Good, which He in the midst of our calamities manifests unto us, at the same time confessing before God our many national sins, deprecating His wrath, and with us call upon God to give wisdom to our Rulers, and their legal advisers, discretion to our officers, and courage to our soldiers; that He may turn the hearts of the rebels from the errors of their ways; and upon the whole, to direct the course of events that victory may perch upon our banner, the tide of treason may flow backward, rebellion be crushed, and the balmy days of peace and prosperity may soon return and smile upon us again, and the Star Spangled Banner wave over the entire land of the free and home of the brave.

CATHOLIC.

I have not been able to ascertain that any council or body of the Church has made a declaration on the subject. Several of the Bishops have, on sundry occasions. Bishop Hughes undertook a mission to Europe in the interest of the Government. His successor, Bishop McCloskey, at the late thanksgiving for victories, ordered a general observance of the day in his diocese, with appropriate services in the churches. Bishop Wood, of Philadelphia, issued this paper:

To the Clergy and Faithful of the Diocese of Philadelphia:
Greeting:

We cheerfully call your attention to the invitation of His Excellency, the President of the United States, who, in announcing the recent successes of the Union arms, desires that all should unite in thanksgiving, supplications and prayers to the Great Ruler of the destinies of nations.

Let us, therefore, send up our thanksgivings to God for the merciful dispositions of His Divine Providence in our regard, and pour forth our earnest supplications that His Divine blessing may descend upon us, and procure for us the inestimable fruit of national harmony and fraternal union.

We request the Reverend Pastors to recite for this intention at the last Mass on Sunday, the Litany of the Saints, and to add such devotions as they may deem appropriate to the occasion.

Pax Domini sit semper vobiscum.
Given at Philadelphia this 9th day of September, A. D. 1864.
† JAMES F. WOOD,
Bishop of Philadelphia.

Archbishop Kenrick, of Baltimore, September 2, 1861, issued an address to the clergy of the diocese of Baltimore, directing the use "on all Sundays at the parochial Mass," of a prayer for the President of the United States, and for the authorities generally, being that framed by John Carroll and prescribed in 1791.

Archbishop John B. Purcell, of Cincinnati, published this Address on a like occasion :

The President of the United States and the Governor of the State of Ohio having, in conformity with a most proper and a time-honored practice, appointed the fourth Thursday of November as a day of devout thanksgiving to the Almighty God for His mercies; of humiliation for our sins; and of supplication for peace; we hereby ordain that the Catholic congregations of this diocese be earnestly exhorted by their pastors to meet in their respective churches on the day above specified, and assist in becoming sentiments of gratitude, penitence and prayer at the great Eucharistic, expiatory and impetratory Sacrifice of the New Law.

We, Catholics, have largely shared in the blessings of health, abundant harvests and exemption from the ravages of war which God has granted to the people of the North. Our sins have as largely merited the chastisement which has overtaken our erring brethren of the South, and which has cost the life-blood of so many thousands of our own brave soldiers who left their pleasant homes to check the advance of the foe and confine the deadly strife to the battle fields on which it sadly originated. Our hopes of future happiness on earth are vain if the peace, the prosperity, the progress in arts, sciences and religion which have distinguished us among all the nations of the earth for fourscore and eight years, and which, under the Divine blessing, are mainly attributable to our Constitution and Union, be not continued by the maintenance of that Union and the elimination of those defects which Christian civilization and our own experience have shown us the Constitution contained. It therefore becomes our solemn duty to observe with no ordinary fervor the National holiday; and as we cannot enjoy, and should not desire, peace, happiness and independence except in the society of our fellow-citizens, we should pray for and promote, by every means in our power, their welfare as well as our own.

We confess that it has greatly pained us to hear that certain rash, irreverent and thoughtless men of our communion have denounced and abused the Government, the Administration, and their abettors. Now, God commands us to bless and curse not. And when had men cursed the supporters of the Government, did they not reflect that they cursed the more than hundreds of thousands of Catholic voters, and Catholic soldiers of our army who defend that Government in the field? Did they not reflect that its downfall would be hailed with acclamation by our own hereditary oppressors, across the ocean? Did they reflect that if political salvation is ever to reach a far distant and beloved island, it must come to it from these United States which they would sever?

There is no justifying cause or reason to curse the Government or the Administration. They did not commence this war. They could scarcely bring themselves to believe that it was seriously commenced, even when forts had fallen and the blood of our people was shed by the hands of the South. And when force had to be repelled by force, when armies had to be raised and, therefore, troops to be drafted to raise the blockade of our rivers and stem the tide of aggression, what more did our Government do than was done in the South? Where in the North was the draft, the conscription, enforced as ruthlessly and as indiscriminately as in the South? Where was the citizens' property confiscated without compensation for the alleged uses of the Government, as it was in the South? We have conversed with Irish Catholic refugees from Georgia, from Arkansas, from Alabama and other Southern States, and we know how they were stripped of their money and their clothes, and cast into prison when they refused to go into the ranks of the Confederate army. Many an Irish laborer told us in the hospitals here and elsewhere, that when the war broke out in the South and the public works were suspended, they were either violently conscripted, or had to enlist or starve.

We do not adduce these facts to excite unkind feelings against the South, but to put to shame the journalists of the North, especially the Freeman's Journal and the Metropolitan Record, of New York, who instigated our too confident people to evil words and deeds, and the people themselves who patronized such journalists and were duped and deceived by their malignity.

It is time, therefore, now that the election is past, that all should return to their sober second thought, and that we should rally round the constituted authorities, the "powers" which the Apostle commands us to obey, and thus presenting an undivided front to the enemy, re-establish the Union, without which there can be no panacea, present or prospective, for the ills they suffer. The South beholding us thus of one mind, will, we devoutly trust, hasten to make peace, and we, on our side, will show them that we are ready and willing to make greater sacrifices for peace and union with them than ever we made for war.

The Reverend Clergy will please recite the Litany of the Saints, in union with their beloved flock, before Mass, repeating three times the two prayers for peace, and the prayer: O God, who by sin art offended, and by repentance pacified, &c.

JOHN B. PURCELL,
Archbishop of Cincinnati.

CINCINNATI, 13th Nov., 1861.

FRIEND OR QUAKER.

YEARLY MEETING FOR PENNSYLVANIA, NEW JERSEY, DELAWARE, AND EASTERN SHORE OF MARYLAND, 1862.

This Address was adopted :

To the President, Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America :

At the yearly meeting of Friends, held in Philadelphia, for Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Delaware, and the Eastern Shore of Maryland, by adjournment from the twelfth day of the fifth month to the sixteenth of the same, inclusive, Anno Domini one thousand eight hundred and sixty-two,

The following minute was read, united with, directed to be signed by the clerks, and forwarded :

This meeting has been introduced into a deep concern relative to the present condition of our country. Our minds have been directed to those who preside over our National Government, and gratitude has been felt to the Great Ruler of Nations that he has so far moved the hearts of these that they have decreed the District of Columbia free from slavery. We earnestly desire that the Chief Magistrate of the Nation and our Congress may, in this season of deep trial, humbly seek Divine guidance, that under this influence they may act for the cause of justice and mercy, in that wisdom which is pure, peaceable and profitable to direct, and that the effusion of blood may be stayed.

Signed by direction and on behalf of the meeting afore-said.

MARY S. LIPPINCOTT,
Clerk of the Women's Meeting.
WILLIAM GRISCOM,
Clerk of the Men's Meeting.

YEARLY MEETING, 1864.

The body adopted this address :

To the President, Senate and House of Representatives of the United States :

This Memorial of the Representative Committee, or Meeting for Sufferings of the Religious Society of Friends, of Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Delaware, and adjacent parts of Maryland, respectfully sheweth, that

We respect, honor and love this Government, which we believe Divine Wisdom has placed over us, and because of this, we desire that it may, in no particular, be found striving against God, or persecuting His children, however humble in position or numbers they may be.

Under the present law of Congress, every able-bodied citizen within certain ages, in time of war, is liable to be called upon by the Government to bear arms in its defence.

We represent a people who cannot comply with this law without disobeying the command of God to them.

Neither can they furnish a substitute or pay any equivalent or fine imposed for exemption from military service, because in so doing, they feel that they would implicate themselves in a violation of their conscientious scruples in this respect.

We hold, that the doctrine that human governments are ordained of God, does not imply the infallibility of those who administer them, and gives them no right to require us to violate our allegiance to the Almighty, who is sovereign Lord of conscience, and whose right it is to rule and reign in the hearts of His children.

For more than two hundred years our Society has held the doctrine, that all wars and fightings were forbidden to them, as followers of Christ—differing in this respect from nearly all other associations of men claiming the Christian name.

For asserting and maintaining this, and other testimonies of the "Truth as it is in Jesus," they were brought under cruel persecution, enduring the despoiling of their estates, incarceration in prisons and loathsome dungeons, and death.

Through this long season of darkness, their dependence was upon Divine Power, under which, their patient suffering and earnest remonstrance obtained in some degree the favor of them in authority.

For the free enjoyment of civil and religious liberty, they came to this land, to seek amongst the so-called savages of the wilderness, immunities and privileges denied them at the hands of a professed Christian nation. Here William Penn and his friends planted their infant colony, and proved the efficacy of the principle of Peace. The conflict of arms was unknown, and history bears no record of strife between the Indian and the Friend.

We their descendants, now approach you, not alone with a view to shield ourselves from suffering, but under a sense of duty to God, to assert the sacred rights of conscience, to raise the standard of the Prince of Peace before the nation, and in His name to ask you to so modify the law, that it shall not require those who administer it, to bring under persecution innocent men for obeying His commands—"Ye are my friends if ye do whatsoever I command you."—"Whether it be right in the sight of God to hearken unto you more than unto God, judge ye."

In thus defining our position, we enter not into judgment or condemnation of those who differ from us. We appreciate the difficulties that surround those upon whom rests the responsibility of guiding the nation through the awful perils of civil war.

We appeal to you under a sense of suffering—afflictions and mourning surround us, and sorrow hath filled our hearts.

Many of our young men, overcome by the spirit of war, have rushed into the conflict, where some of them have found an early death; some have purchased their release from the draft by the payment of money; others have remained steadfast to their faith in the hour of trial, thereby subjecting themselves to the penalty for desertion. Trusting in the mercy of our Heavenly Father, we desire that He may so touch your hearts and understandings with His wisdom, that you may grant our petition.

Signed by the direction, and on behalf of the Committee.
SAMUEL PARRY, Clerk.

UNITARIAN.

CONFERENCE OF THE WESTERN UNITARIAN ASSOCIATION, HELD AT TOLEDO, OHIO, JUNE, 1863.

June—The body met at Toledo, Ohio, and adopted the following resolutions:

Whereas our allegiance to the kingdom of God requires of us loyalty to every righteous authority on earth; therefore,

Resolved, That we give to the President of the United States, and to all who are charged with the guidance and defence of our nation in its present terrible struggle for the preservation of liberty, public order, and Christian civilization, against the powerful wickedness of treason and rebellion, the assurance of our cordial sympathy and steady support, and that we will cheerfully continue to share any and all needful burdens and sacrifices in the holy cause of our country.

2. That we hail with gratitude and hope the rapidly growing conviction among the loyal masses of our countrymen that the existence of human slavery is inconsistent with the national safety and honor, as it is inconsistent with natural right and justice, and that we ask the Government a thorough and vigorous enforcement of the policy of emancipation, as necessary alike to military success, to lasting peace, and to the just supremacy of the Constitution over all the land.

These resolutions are in harmony with the tone of Sermons, Addresses, and Discussions, at all the Annual and Semi-annual meetings of the Unitarians, since the war began. The central body—the "American Unitarian Association,"—by rule and established practice, abstain from organized ecclesiastical action. The general position of the denomination, however, is well known. With marked unanimity, its leading societies and ministers have given their earnest support to the policy of the National Government respecting Union, Emancipation, and Permanent Peace. The accredited organs of the denomination—the Christian Examiner, a bi-monthly, the Monthly Journal, the Religious Miscellany, the Christian Register, and the Christian Inquirer—have incessantly and uncompromisingly advocated the cause of Union and Freedom throughout the Republic. One of their ministers—Rev. William Henry Channing—is Chaplain of the present House of Representatives, 38th Congress. For the subjoined interesting facts I am indebted to Rev. A. Woodbury, of Providence, R. I.:

One minister of the Unitarian Church has been a colonel of a colored regiment; one a lieutenant colonel of the same; one a captain aide-de-camp; two lieutenants in the line, one of whom was killed in battle; one a corporal and two privates. The Church has furnished forty (40) chaplains, two of whom have been killed in action, and one died in the service. One minister is a secretary in the office of the New England Educational Commission. Three have been engaged in teaching the freedmen of South Carolina and Mississippi, one of whom contracted a fatal disease in the course of his labors. The Presidents of the United States Sanitary Commission and the Western Sanitary Commission are ministers of the Unitarian church. One is associate secretary of the United States Sanitary Commission; another is secretary of the Western Sanitary Commission, and a considerable number have been engaged in missionary and sanitary labors at different times during the progress of the war.

Since the commencement of the struggle nineteen tracts have been published, entitled as follows: The Soldier's Companion (a book of songs and tunes); The Man and the Soldier; The Soldier of the Good Cross; The Home to the Camp; Liberty and Law, a poem for the hour; The Camp and the Field; The Home to the Hospital; a Letter to a Sick Soldier; An Enemy Within the Lines; Wounded and in the Hands of the Enemy; Traitors in Camp; A Change of Base; On Picket; The Rebel; To the Color; The Recruit; A Few Words with the Convalescent; The Reconnoissance, and The Reveille. Twelve of these were written by Rev. J. F. Ware, and the residue by Rev. Dr. Geo. Putnam, Rev. Messrs. Woodbury, Collyer and Winkley, and Messrs. Charles E. Norton and Elbridge J. Cutler. Of these no less than 496,000 copies had been distributed up to July, 1864, at an expense of about $3,600. The Association has also sent out one missionary to the Army of the Potomac, who was taken prisoner in the performance of his duty, and, after two months' confinement, was released on his parole. Other ministers have visited the camps and the hospitals at different times, and have done a faithful missionary work as opportunity and strength were given them. Arrangements have recently been made for the more extensive distribution of Unitarian publications among the armies of the Republic. To the amount of work performed by the ministers of the Unitarian Church are to be added the toils and sacrifices of the laymen. The members of the Church are to be found in all grades of the army, from the drummer-boy to the major general, and among the officers and sailors of the navy of the United States.

UNITED BRETHREN.

EAST PENNSYLVANIA CONFERENCE OF UNITED BRETHREN IN CHRIST, 1863.

March—The body adopted these resolutions:

Whereas our beloved and prosperous country, by the hellish intrigues of designing aspirants after power and gain, is now deluged by one of the most unholy and diabolical rebellions that ever cursed our world, thereby endangering the great, good principles of the Government, and threatening to overthrow our free institutions, and the destruction of our blood-purchased and heaven-sanctified liberties;

And whereas there appears no honorable or righteous element of power in our hands to put in force to subdue treason and crush rebellion but a resort to arms; and whereas an enlightened and christianized people may employ physical force, even to the destroying of human life, for the protection and preservation of its subjects and the perpetuation of its own existence, as we have in the following quotation from the Scripture of Truth: "For there is no power but of God; the powers that be are ordained of God."

"Whosoever, therefore, resisteth the powers resisteth the ordinance of God, and they that resist shall receive unto themselves damnation. For rulers are not a terror to good works but to the evil." * * * "For he is the minister of God to thee good. But if thou do that which is evil be afraid: for he beareth not the sword in vain, for he is the minister of God, a revenger to execute vengeance upon him that doeth evil." Therefore,

Resolved, 1. That we look upon the action of the so-called "Southern Confederacy," from first to last, as a record of the most hellish inhumanity, unrighteousness and barbarity ever known in the records of the nations.

2. That we look upon the efforts of Northern Copperheads to aid Southern miscreants in their nefarious work to overthrow our Government, as beings unworthy the protection of the Stars and Stripes, or the sympathy of any true, loyal man.

3. That we do most determinedly condemn the assertions of unholy, disloyal, foul-mouthed and designing politicians, that ministers of the Gospel are the cause of the present rebellion.

4. That our devout sympathies are with the thousands of our fellow-citizens who are enduring the privations, sufferings and dangers of the army, and also for their families and friends at home, and that we will continue our earnest petitions to God in their behalf.

5. That we believe God, in his divine providence, has put Abraham Lincoln, the proper man in the right place, the Presidential chair, and that we endorse his every effort to rid the country of the most heaven daring of all evils and sins—human slavery.

6. That we continue to offer to God our sincere prayers, for our President, that he may be sustained in his great and arduous duties by divine power, and that every loyal heart may beat with warmest sympathies for him, and that heaven may mercifully hold his heart in his almighty hand.

7. That we believe that the deep-seated, unnatural, inhuman, unchristian, and causeless hatred to the colored race, should and must cease to render our nation acceptable to God.

8. That we will endeavor to make judicious and Christian efforts in our different fields of labor, publicly and privately, to collect funds to send missionaries and teachers among the now free, and yet to be freed, colored people.

9. That we approve heartily the course of Governor Curtin in his exertions to aid the General Government in subduing the present cursed rebellion, and in his efforts to save our State from the fierce, fiery tread of traitorous oppressors and cut-throats; and that we hurl back with contempt the assailing of his actions by Northern rebels in the press or private conversation.

10. That a copy of the foregoing preamble and resolutions be taken to President Lincoln, by Bishop Markwood, assuring him that there is unwavering and deeply-rooted loyalty glowing in the hearts of the members of this Conference, and the people whom they represent.

UNIVERSALIST.

GENERAL CONVENTION OF UNIVERSALISTS, 1861.

September 17—The body met in New York.

September 19—The Report of the Committee on the State of the Country—Revs. L. C. Browne, A. St. John Chambre, and Mr. Dean Clapp—after being amended to read as follows, was unanimously adopted:

Whereas, Our country is now unfortunately involved in a war occasioned by an unwarrantable and atrocious rebellion against its government constitutionally chosen, and the success of which would jeopardize the cause of civil and religious freedom throughout the world; therefore,

Resolved, That we hereby express our earnest sympathy with our rulers in this their hour of trial; with our countrymen for the defence of our institutions, and with the ministers of our own and other Christian orders who are called, in the Providence of God, to administer Christian admonition and consolation in the camp and on the field.

2. That we, as a denomination, pledge our earnest labors, our pecuniary means, and our heartfelt prayers for the success of the Federal arms, the defeat of this unnatural rebellion, and the speedy return of an honorable peace, and the prosperity that has crowned us as a United Nation in the past.

A resolution offered by Rev. G. L. Demarest of Ohio—but not published in the Minutes—was discussed and tabled, and re-discussed and re-tabled.

GENERAL CONVENTION OF UNIVERSALISTS, 1862.

September 16—The body met at Chicago.—Rev. J. S. Dennis of Iowa, Rev. C. W. Biddle of New Jersey, and Rev. A. W. Bruce of Massachusetts, were appointed a Committee on Business.

September 17—Mr. Dennis reported the following preamble and resolutions:

Whereas our country is still afflicted by the bloody strife that has been precipitated upon us; and whereas we esteem it the duty of every loyal citizen, especially those representing the moral and Christian sentiment of the land, to declare fealty to the Government, in this hour of its peril, and to uphold the hands of those in authority over us; therefore,

Resolved, That while in our judgment, we must accept the existing strife as the natural and inevitable penalty of our national infidelity to our republican principles, and of our attempt to reconcile freedom and slavery (which are essentially irreconcilable,) we renewedly express our faith in the justice of our cause and in the certainty of our final triumph; and renewedly tender to the President and his Constitutional advisers, the assurance of our sympathies amidst the great responsibilities of their position; and of our hearty support in all proper and efficient efforts to suppress this atrocious rebellion.

Resolved, That we gratefully record our appreciation of the patriotism of our people, and of the valor and heroism of our soldiers; and that while we honor those who have relinquished the charms of home, and offered life as a sacrifice for our country, we invoke God's blessing upon them, amidst the exposures of war, and ask His comforting grace for the homes that have thus been darkened, and for the hearts that the casualties of battle have bereaved.

Resolved, That we have occasion, amidst the events through which we are passing, to be deeply impressed with the reality of God's moral rule, and to learn anew the lesson, that neither nations nor individuals can safely defy His law, nor hope to escape from the inexorable ordinance, that sinners must eat of the fruit of their doings.

Afternoon Session—Rev. T. T. Goodrich, of New York, moved to strike out the words, "and of our attempt to reconcile freedom and slavery, (which are essentially irreconcilable);"—which was lost.

On motion of Mr. L. J. Fletcher, the report was re-committed—yeas 17, nays 16.

September 18—Rev. C. W. Biddle, of New Jersey, offered the following:

Whereas our beloved country is still afflicted with a bloody civil war, and a determined foe is striving to usurp the authority of the Central Government in a portion of the land; and whereas, it is the duty of all loyal citizens and organizations to acknowledge the blessings of good Government, and to support the rulers of the nation; and whereas we are deeply interested in the present contest between our country and its foes; therefore,

Resolved, That we re-affirm our devotion to the cause of the nation, in this hour of its pain and peril; that we regard as second only to the cross of Christ the glorious banner of the country; that we look on it, in this strife, as the emblem of constitutional government and the symbol of our national unity and life.

Resolved, In the words of Washington, "That the unity of government that constitutes us one people, is the main pillar of our political independence and that the union of these States under one Constitution and Government, and the maintenance of our republic, is the hope of the oppressed of all nations;" that we find in dissolution, the seeds of future and indefinite conflict; and that the arm of the nation must be stretched forth till the rebellion is put down.

Resolved, That we tender to the President of the United States our sympathy in his efforts to maintain the integrity of the Government, and pray that by a vigorous exercise of all the energies of the nation, victory may perch upon our banner and peace be speedily restored to the land.

Resolved, That we implore the blessing of Almighty God on our Army and Navy, that they may be preserved in time of battle and triumph in every contest; and that we humbly pray, we may learn from these heavy chastisements under which we are passing, that there is a God that judgeth in the earth, and that only righteousness can exalt a nation.

Rev. J. T. Goodrich moved its adoption.

Rev. L. J. Fletcher moved as an amendment the adoption of the preamble and first resolution.

Hon. G. I. Parsons of Michigan moved to lay the report on the table; which was lost—yeas 9, nays 14. He then moved the substitution of the preamble and resolutions of yesterday's report; which was agreed to—yeas 26, nays 9, as follows:

YEAS—Clerical: A. W. Bruce of Massachusetts, C. H. Fay of Rhode Island, E. G. Brooks of New York, G. W. Montgomery of New York, D. Bacon of Pennsylvania, Marion Crosby of Ohio, W. J. Chaplin of Indiana, H. F. Miller of Indiana, A. G. Hubbard of Illinois, James Gorton of Michigan, J. S. Dennis of Iowa, G. W. Lawrence of Wisconsin—12. Lay: Dennis Britain of Vermont, J. W. Fairbanks of Massachusetts, J. A. Darling of Rhode Island, Isaac Tinkley of New York, Aaron D. Miller of Indiana, John Heston of Indiana, Paul B. Ring of Illinois, Hon. Alfred Knowles of Illinois, A. G. Throop of Illinois, Hon. G. I. Parsons of Michigan, Hon. W. A. Robinson of Michigan, C. H. Wright of Iowa, H. M. Buttle of Wisconsin, N. H. Hemmip of Minnesota—14. Total, 26.

NAYS—Clerical: L. I. Fletcher of Massachusetts, C. W. Biddle of New Jersey, George Messenger of Ohio, J. P. Weston of Illinois, J. T. Goodrich of New York—5. Lay: Benjamin Kelley of Maine, Minot Tirrell of Massachusetts, John Osborn of Massachusetts, P. P. Demarest of New York—4. Total, 9.

The report of 17th made by Mr. Dennis, was then adopted, as substituted, yeas 28, nays 7. Same as before, except that Revs. Mr. Fletcher and Mr. Weston changed from nay to aye.

GENERAL CONVENTION OF UNIVERSALISTS, 1863.

September 15—The body met in Portland, Maine.

September 17—The Business Committee—Revs. J. G. Bartholomew, H. R. Walworth, and A. Battles—reported these resolutions:

Whereas the General Convention of Universalists in the United States of America, has ever been distinguished for its loyalty to Government and its devotion to the principles of freedom and humanity; therefore,

Resolved, That in this time of national peril, when the wicked hands of a blood-thirsty rebellion have been raised to strike a death-blow at the Constitution and the laws of the land, and overthrow the liberties of every citizen, we recognize the merciful hand of Providence in the constant and zealous loyalty of the great majority of our people, as well as in the victories which have recently crowned our arms; and while we still appeal to our rulers and the people not to abate their vigor in prosecuting the war until the rebellion is effectually subdued, we yet feel that our trust must be in God, who alone can give us permanent triumph.

2. That we renew our expressions of Christian fidelity and loyalty to the Government, and reaffirm our confidence in our Chief Magistrate, whose honesty of purpose stands unimpeached; and that we recognize in his Proclamation of January 1st, 1863, a carrying out of the injunction of Scripture to "break every yoke and let the oppressed go free."

3. That we recognize the wisdom which prompted our fathers in their struggle for National Independence to arm the negro in securing our freedom, and are sanguine in the belief that a similar policy adopted at this time, which shall call the blacks to share with the whites in the perils and sacrifices of our present struggle, and secure to them the blessings of a common freedom, will be equally effectual in re-establishing order among us, and striking at the root of this cruel rebellion, "so that when peace comes, it will come as to stay, and be a peace worth having."

4. That "the President of this Council be instructed to forward to the President of the United States a copy of these resolutions.

The first resolution was adopted. On the second, the vote was:

YEAS—Clerical: A. Battles, F. A. Hodsdon, B. F. Bowles, Eli Ballou, T. R. Spencer, J. S. Barry, Benton Smith, A. M. Rhodes, Thomas Borden, H. Blanchard, C. W. Tomlinson, H. R. Walworth, Richard Eddy—13. Lay: Hon. Israel Washburn, E. F. Beal, W. A. Vaughn, Moses Humphrey, E. C. Starr, E. C. Fuller, J. M. Sargent, Benjamin Spinnay, G. W. Hall, Willard Goldthwaite, H. J. Angell, Paschal Converse, James Cooper, N. Van Nostrand, G. W. Barnes, J. J. Van Zandt, David Tappen—17. Total, 30.

NAYS—Clerical: G. L. Demarest and George Messenger of Ohio—2. Lay: David Tichenor of New Jersey—1. Total, 3.

The remaining resolutions were adopted without division.

GENERAL CONVENTION OF UNIVERSALISTS, 1864.

September 20—The body met in Concord, N. H.

September 21—The report of the Committee on the State of the Country—J. V. Wilson of Conn., P. B. Ring of Ill., and Revs. M. Goodrich of R. I., Richard Eddy of Penn., L. J. Fletcher of N. Y., and J. M. Usher of Mass.,—was unanimously adopted, as follows:

Whereas the fearful war with which our nation has been scourged for years still continues, and makes additional demands on our courage, energy, patience and faith; therefore

Resolved, That we recognize in it the punishment of our people for their persistent arrogance and oppression. We can not therefore hope for the return of peace through efforts to rivet anew the chains of the bondman, or to perpetuate the former glaring inconsistencies between our professions of love for liberty and the support of slavery.

2. That while we deplore the bloodshed, costliness and agonies of war, and earnestly pray for peace, we yet deem a cessation of hostilities which leaves it unsettled whether treason is to be rebuked or petted and fondled, a delusion and a snare. If followed by attempts to bribe traitors to return to a nominal allegiance by the promise of surrendering to their vengeance two hundred thousand colored men, who are now bravely battling in our armies for Union and order, it would show such dastardly perfidy in our Government, as would call down on our nation the stern displeasure of a righteous God, and condemnation from all good men; such attempts would sound the knell of our Union, the shipwreck of our country.

3. That while we gratefully accord the meed of praise to Grant, Sherman, and their brave associates in command on the land, and to Farragut, Stringham, Porter, and the other noble commanders on the sea, for their valor and skill, we desire to place on record our admiration for and gratitude to the common soldiers and sailors, who, with little hope of distinction and fame, have cheerfully periled their lives for country and humanity. While so many are found ready to serve, as well as to be served, to follow as well as to lead, we will not despair of the Republic.

4. That while we recollect that it was not alone by the sword of Joshua, but also by the uplifted arm of Moses, that Israel prevailed over Amalek of old, we recognize the power of earnest, trustful prayer. Most reverently, therefore, will we continue to supplicate the God of Sabbath, that justice and equity may be done in our land; that anarchy and misrule may be checked; that righteousness may triumph, and peace speedily return; and that the Lord God may lift his face upon us and bless us.

YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATIONS.

NATIONAL CONVENTION OF YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATIONS OF THE UNITED STATES AND THE BRITISH PROVINCES, 1863.

May—The body met in Chicago. Delegates were present from most of the Northern States, the District of Columbia, Canada and England. The Association was presided over by George H. Stuart, of Philadelphia, and passed the following resolutions:

Resolved, That we hereby reaffirm our unconditional loyalty to the Government of the United States, and our determination to afford every required and Christian aid for the suppression of the infamous rebellion.

Resolved, That we are gratified by the steps already taken by the Administration for the removal of the great sin of slavery—"the sum of all villainies"—and must express our candid conviction that the war will last so long as its cause morally exists, and that when we as a nation do fully right, God will not delay to give success to our arms.

Resolved, That it is no time to confound liberty with lawlessness. We cherish the dearest boon of freedom with jealous vigilance, but remember that true freedom can only continue under restraints, and exist at all as guarded by law.

Resolved, That neither is this a time for doubtful, timid measures. The counsels of time-serving, self-seeking, inconsistent politicians are not to be heeded; but the loud voice of the loyal people, the heroic demands of our teeming volunteers, and the vigorous measures of unselfish and uncompromising generals are to be respected by those who rule over us.

Resolved, That we remember with honest gratitude the noble and immense work accomplished by the Young Men's Christian Association of our land, and the sanitary and spiritual fields opened up by the providence of God for our willing hearts and hands, and pledge that we will continue to pray for our army and navy and to meet their wants in the future with greater fidelity, if possible.

THE AMERICAN BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS.

October, 1864—At the recent meeting of the Board in Worcester, Massachusetts, Rev. Albert Barnes was, by unanimous vote, granted leave to present a series of important resolutions without the reference of the same to a special committee. The preamble and resolutions are as following:

Whereas this Board is called upon to conduct its operations at an important crisis of our country, the result of which must materially affect the missionary cause in time to come; and

Whereas this Board has on former occasions expressed its sense of the system of slavery in our country, which lies at the foundation of the present effort to overcome our civil institutions and to establish a separate government in our land; and

Whereas the missionaries of this Board have with entire unanimity expressed their interest in the cause of the country in its endeavors to maintain the Government, and have freely given their sons to the defence of the nation in its present crisis; therefore Resolved, 1st. That this Board receives with affectionate sympathy these expressions of the interest thus manifested by those in its service, and the sacrifices thus made.

Resolved, 2d. That in connection with the purpose to spread the Gospel throughout the world, the results of the contest on the cause of missions, and in view of diffusing a religion that will be everywhere adapted to sustain just civil government and the principles of liberty, and that shall tend to deliver the world from the oppression of slavery, as well as in the relation of its members to the Government of this land, and their duty to sustain that Government,—this Board expresses its hearty sympathy in the efforts to suppress the rebellion, and gratefully acknowledges the divine interposition in the successes which have attended the arms of the nation, as an indication that we shall again be one people, united under one glorious Constitution, united in our efforts to spread the Gospel around the world.

The resolutions were seconded by Rev. Dr. Brainerd, of Philadelphia, and unanimously adopted, the audience rising en masse and spontaneously singing

My country, 'tis of thee,
Sweet land of liberty, &c.

UNITED PRESBYTERIAN.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF THE UNITED PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH, 1863.

May 27—The body met in Xenia, Ohio.

June 4—The report of the special Committee on the "freedmen of our Southern States"—Revs. G. C. Vincent, J. B. Johnston, John Van Eaton, and Elders William Walker and D. Mitchell—was adopted, as follows:

That in the interests of the United Presbyterian Church a Board be created for this special purpose, and that the following Constitution be adopted with a view to secure the objects contemplated:—

CONSTITUTION OF THE BOARD OF MISSIONS FOR THE FREEDMEN OF THE SOUTH.

I. There shall be a Board of Missions for the Freedmen, to be appointed by and amenable to the Assembly.

II. It shall consist of nine members, who shall hold their office three years, and five of whom shall constitute a quorum. Of those first chosen three shall go out of office annually in the order of their names; and thereafter three shall annually be elected by the Assembly.

III. The Board shall be located in the City of Allegheny.

IV. The Board shall meet quarterly, and as much oftener as necessary; and shall hold its first meeting on the 4th of July, 1863, at ten o'clock, A. M., in the Second Church.

V. The Board shall have power to fill any vacancies occurring therein during the year, and shall be styled, "The Board of Missions of the United Presbyterian Church of North America, for the Freedmen of our Southern States."

VI. To this Board shall be intrusted, with such directions and instructions as may from time to time be given by the Assembly, the superintendence of the Freedmen Missionary operations of the Church.

VII. The Board shall make to the Assembly an annual report of its proceedings, its condition, and its needs, and shall submit for approval such plans and measures as may be deemed necessary or useful.

VIII. To the board shall belong the duty, though not the exclusive right, of nominating and appointing Missionaries and Agents, and of designating fields of labor: to them shall belong the duty of receiving the reports of the Corresponding Secretary; of giving him needful directions in reference to all matters of business and correspondence intrusted to him; of preparing for the Assembly estimates of all appropriations and expenditures of money; and of taking the particular direction and oversight of the Freedmen's missionary work, subject to the revision and control of the Assembly.

IX. All property, houses, lands, tenements, and permanent funds belonging to the Board, shall be taken in the name of the Trustees of the Assembly, and held in trust by them for the use and benefit of "The Board of Missions of the United Presbyterian Church of North America for the Freedmen of the South."

X. The Board shall have power to enact its own By-Laws.

XI. This Constitution shall not be changed, unless by a vote of two-thirds of the General Assembly present at any of its sessions, of which notice shall be given at least one day previously.

XII. The Board shall submit an abstract of its condition, proceedings, wants, and plans, to the several Synods of the Church at their annual meetings.

As some Presbyteries have already taken action upon this subject, and have agencies on the field, your committee recommend the following resolutions:

Resolved, 1. That the doings of the Presbyteries of Wheeling, Muskingum, Chartiers, and 1st Presbytery of Ohio, be recognized and approved, and after the organization of this Board it shall be the duty of these agencies to report their doings and resources to said Board.

Resolved, 2. That such Presbyteries as may prefer it are hereby authorized to select their own mission field, procure their own laborers, and conduct their missions in their own way, provided that they report to the Board the location of their respective fields, the laborers employed and the amount of funds collected and disbursed.

Your committee would recommend the following persons as members of the Board of Missions to the Freedmen of the South:

Revs. J. B. Clark, Charles A. Dickey, J. W. Baine, J. G. Barnes, W. J. Reid, G. C. Vincent, and Messrs. John Dean, James Robb and James Mitchell, with power to fill vacancies.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF THE UNITED PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH, 1864.

May 25—The body met in Philadelphia.

June 2—The following report of the Committee on Bills and Overtures—Revs. S. Wilson, D. D., S. Wallace, William Davidson, Wm. M. McElwee, D. D., and Elders Jno. Dean, H. Warnock, Thomas McAlister—was adopted:

The Committee on Bills and Overtures beg leave to report on three papers submitted to them by the Assembly; the first from G. D. Henderson and S. Collins; the 2d from S. Wilson and A. M. Elliott; and the 3d from S. Livingston and W. M. McElwee, as follows:

I. The paper of G. D. Henderson and S. Collins asks for the appointment of a committee to prepare an address to President Lincoln, Secretary Stanton, and Lieut. General Grant, embodying the following items:—

1st. An assurance of the deep sympathy and earnest co-operation of this Assembly and of the people whom we represent, with the Government in its present trials and worthy efforts to maintain the principles on which it is based.

2d. The great satisfaction we have enjoyed in observing their recognition of the facts—"that God alone can organize victory," "that we need the Divine favor," and that we are warranted to expect this favor only in the way of a dutiful regard to His will as Governor among the nations.

3d. An assurance that we gladly recognize this favor in the successes which have attended the movements of our armies on the Potomac and in Georgia, and that it is only in the continuance of this favor that we can hope for final success.

That an address of the nature contemplated in the paper of these brethren should go forth from this Assembly, it appears to your Committee, is highly proper. We therefore recommend for adoption the following resolution, viz:

Resolved, That a Committee be appointed to prepare, at their earliest convenience, an address such as the paper of these brethren contemplates, and forward it to President Lincoln and his Cabinet.

II. The paper of S. Wilson and A. M. Elliott asks that a Committee be appointed to report whether any, and if so, what advice should be tendered by this Assembly to our National Executive, touching the morality of retaliation as a means of preventing the continuance of the cruelty and barbarity which has been practiced upon our soldiers by our rebel enemies. As this paper was presented under the impression that President Lincoln was hesitating on the question of retaliation, your Committee think to action is needed in the premises by this Assembly, as we have been informed that the President has already decided the course to be pursued by him, and that retaliation is being already practised to some extent by the Union army. We therefore recommend that this paper be dismissed.

III. The paper of S. Livingston and W. M. McElwee asks for the adoption of the following resolution:

That this Assembly hail the Emancipation Proclamation of President Lincoln as a measure of high military importance and necessity, and statesmanlike in striking at slavery, the root, cause, and strength of the rebellion, and that we recognize in it the voice of God speaking as he did to his ancient people Israel, saying by it to us, "Break every yoke and let the oppressed go free." The Committee present this resolution in another form, and recommend that in this amended form it be adopted, viz:

Resolved, That without expressing any judgment on the military importance and necessity, or the statesmanlike character of the Proclamation, we hail it as obedience to the voice of God, calling us, as he did his ancient people, Let the oppressed go free and break every yoke.

Action of Churches in the Insurrectionary States.

PRESBYTERIAN.

PRESBYTERIAN (OLD SCHOOL) SYNOD OF SOUTH CAROLINA, 1860.

December 3—Report of committee unanimously adopted, closing thus:

The Synod has no hesitation, therefore, in expressing the belief that the people of South Carolina are now solemnly called on to initiate their Revolutionary forefathers, and stand up for their rights. We have an humble and abiding confidence, that that God, whose truth we represent in this conflict, will be with us, and exhorting our churches and people to put their trust in God, and go forward in the solemn path of duty which his Providence opens before them, we, ministers and elders of the Presbyterian Church in South Carolina Synod assembled, would give them our benediction, and the assurance that we shall fervently and unceasingly implore for them the care and protection of Almighty God.

Several of the Presbyteries of the Old School Presbyterian Church in the Seceded States held their regular fall meetings in 1861, and, without exception, passed acts of separation from the General Assembly of the church, and appointed delegates to attend at Augusta, Georgia, on the 4th of December, for the purpose of forming a General Assembly of the Southern Confederacy portion of the denomination—which was done.

1861, July 24—The Presbytery of South Alabama met at Selma, and declared severed its ecclesiastical connection with the General Assembly of the United States, and recommended a meeting of a Confederate States Assembly at Memphis, on the 4th of the next December, suggesting, for a preliminary convention, if such be desired, Atlanta as the place and August 15th the time.

CHARLESTON (S. C.) PRESBYTERY, (OLD SCHOOL), 1861.

July 25—The body met in Columbia, when the following preamble and resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Whereas, The relations of the State of South Carolina, of ten other adjacent States, and of the people thereof, with the other States and people previously composing the United States of America, have been dissolved, and the former united in the separate and independent Government of the Confederate States of America, thereby making a separate and independent organization of the Church within the said Confederate States desirable and necessary, in order to the more faithful and successful fulfilment of its duty to its Divine Lord and Master; and whereas, the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, by the adoption of a paper known as Dr. Spring's Resolutions, ignoring the establishment of the Government of the Confederate States of America, and disregarding our rights, privileges, and duties as citizens thereof, enjoined our allegiance to, and support of, a Government foreign and hostile to our own, and required us not only to yield obedience to a political power which we, in common with our fellow-citizens of all classes and all churches, have disowned and rejected, but also to act as traitors and rebels against the rightful and legal authorities of the land in which we live; and whereas these resolutions of the General Assembly require us to continue united to a people who have violated the Constitution under which we were originally confederated, and broken the covenant entered into by their fathers and ours; and whereas, the said action of the General Assembly in the United States of America, demands of us and all members of the Presbyterian Church in the Confederate States, the approval and support of the wicked and cruel war now waged by the other States of the former United States of America against the States and people of the Confederate States, against our fellow-citizens, against our friends and neighbors, against our own households and ourselves; and whereas, we do most heartily, with the full approval of our consciences before our Lord God, unanimously approve the action of the States and people of the Confederate States of America; therefore,

Be it resolved by the Charleston Presbytery,

1. That the ecclesiastical relations heretofore subsisting between this Presbytery and the Presbyterian Church of the United States of America are dissolved; that we do not recognize the right or authority of the General Assembly to adopt the resolutions above referred to; and that we disown and repudiate those resolutions, both in their letter and their spirit, as having no authority over us, and as entitled to no respect or consideration from us.

2. That in the judgment of this Presbytery, it is expedient and necessary that the Presbyterian Churches in the Confederate States should formally separate themselves from the Presbyterian Church in the United States, and establish a separate and independent ecclesiastical organization.

3. That this Presbytery heartily approves of holding a Convention of all the Presbyteries in the Confederate States, for the purpose of considering this whole matter, securing the united and harmonious action of the whole Church, and devising and recommending such measures as may be necessary fully to organize the Church in the Confederate States.

4. That this Presbytery will proceed to appoint two ministers and two ruling elders, with alternates, to attend such Convention, who shall be authorized to advise and act with similar delegates appointed by other Presbyteries in the Confederate States, as in their judgment may seem best; the action of said delegates and of the Convention to be submitted to this Presbytery for its action thereon.

5. That this Presbytery prefers Atlanta, Ga., as the place, and the 15th of August next as the time, for the meeting of the proposed Convention, but that our delegates be authorized and instructed to meet at any time or place that may be agreed on by the majority of the Presbyteries appointing similar delegates, previous to the next stated meeting of this Presbytery.

JOHN DOUGLAS, Stated Clerk.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH IN THE CONFEDERATE STATES, 1861.

December 4—The body met in Augusta, Georgia—35 ministers and 38 elders present.

Same day—A Committee consisting of James H. Thornwell, D. D., Theodoric Pryor, D. D., C. C. Jones, D. D., R. B. White, D. D., W. D.

Moore, D. D., J. H. Gillespie, J. I. Boozer, R. W. Bailey, D. D., and Frederick K. Nash, Ministers; J. D. Armstrong, Charles Phillips, Joseph A. Brooks, W. P. Finley, Samuel McCorkle, William P. Webb, William L. Black, T. L. Dunlap, and E. W. Wright, Ruling Elders—was appointed to prepare an Address "setting forth the causes of our separation from the churches in the United States, our attitude in relation to SLAVERY, and a general view of the policy, which, as a Church, we propose to pursue." Subsequently the Committee reported the following Address, which was unanimously adopted:

The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the Confederate States of America, to all the Churches of Jesus Christ throughout the earth, greeting: Grace, mercy, and peace be multiplied unto you!

DEARLY BELOVED BRETHREN: It is probably known to you that the Presbyteries and Synods in the Confederate States, which were formerly in connection with the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, have renounced the jurisdiction of that body; and dissolved the ties which bound them ecclesiastically with their brethren of the North. This act of separation left them without any formal union among themselves. But as they were one in faith and order, and still adhered to their old standards, measures were promptly adopted for giving expression to their unity, by the organization of a Supreme Court, upon the model of the one whose authority they had just relinquished. Commissioners, duly appointed, from all the Presbyteries of these Confederate States, met accordingly, in the city of Augusta, on the fourth day of December, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-one, and then and there proceeded to constitute the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the Confederate States of America. The Constitution of the Presbyterian Church in the United States—that is to say, the Westminster Confession of Faith, the Larger and Shorter Catechisms, the Form of Government, the Book of Discipline, and the Directory for Worship—were unanimously and solemnly declared to be the Constitution of the Church in the Confederate States, with no other change than the substitution of "Confederate" for "United" wherever the country is mentioned in the standards. The Church, therefore, in these seceded States, presents now the spectacle of a separate, and independent, and complete organization, under the style and title of the Presbyterian Church in the Confederate States of America. In thus taking its place among sister churches of this and other countries, it seems proper that it should set forth the causes which have impelled it to separate from the Church of the North, and to indicate a general view of the course which it feels it incumbent upon it to pursue in the new circumstances in which it is placed.

We should be sorry to be regarded by our brethren in any part of the world as guilty of schism. We are not conscious of any purpose to rend the body of Christ. On the contrary, our aim has been to promote the unity of the Spirit in the bonds of peace. If we know our own hearts, and can form any just estimate of the motives which have governed us, we have been prompted by a sincere desire to promote the glory of God, and the efficiency, energy, harmony, and zeal of his visible kingdom in the earth. We have separated from our brethren of the North as Abraham separated from Lot—because we are persuaded that the interests of true religion will be more effectually subserved by two independent Churches, under the circumstances in which the two countries are placed, than by one united body.

1. In the first place, the course of the last Assembly, at Philadelphia, conclusively shows that if we should remain together, the political questions which divide us as citizens, will be obtruded on our Church Courts, and discussed by Christian ministers and elders with all the acrimony, bitterness, and rancor, with which such questions are usually discussed by men of the world. Our Assembly would present a mournful spectacle of strife and debate. Commissioners from the Northern would meet with Commissioners from the Southern Confederacy, to wrangle over the questions which have split them into two confederacies, and involved them in furious and bloody war. They would denounce each other, on the one hand, as tyrants and oppressors, and on the other, as traitors and rebels. The Spirit of God would take his departure from these scenes of confusion, and leave the Church lifeless and powerless, an easy prey to the sectional divisions and angry passions of its members. Two nations, under any circumstances, except those of perfect homogeneousness, cannot be united in one Church, without the rigid exclusion of all civil and secular questions from its halls. Where the countries differ in their customs and institutions, and view each other with an eye of jealousy and rivalry, if national feelings are permitted to enter the Church Courts, there must be an end of harmony and peace. The prejudices of the man and the citizen will prove stronger than the charity of the Christian. When they have allowed themselves to denounce each other for their national peculiarities, it will be hard to join in cordial fellowship as members of the same spiritual family. Much more must this be the case where the nations are not simply rivals, but enemies—when they hate each other with a cruel hatred—when they are engaged in a ferocious and bloody war, and when the worst passions of human nature are stirred to their very depths. An Assembly composed of representatives from two such countries, could have no security for peace except in a steady, uncompromising adherence to the Scriptural principle, that it would know no man after the flesh; that it would abolish the distinctions of Barbarian, Scythian, bond and free, and recognize nothing but the new creature in Christ Jesus. The moment it permits itself to know the Confederate or the United States, the moment its members meet as citizens of these countries, our political differences will be transferred to the house of God, and the passions of the forum will expel the spirit of holy love and of Christian communion.

We cannot condemn a man, in one breath, as unfaithful to the most solemn earthly interests—his country and his race—and commend him in the next as a loyal and faithful servant of his God. If we distrust his patriotism, our confidence is apt to be very measured in his piety. The old adage will hold here as in other things, falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus.

The only conceivable condition, therefore, upon which the Church of the North and the South could remain together as one body, with any prospect of success, is the rigorous exclusion of the questions and passions of the forum from its halls of debate. This is what always ought to be done. The provinces of Church and State are perfectly distinct, and the one has no right to usurp the jurisdiction of the other. The State is a natural institute, founded in the constitution of man as moral and social, and designed to realize the idea of justice. It is the society of rights. The Church is a supernatural institute, founded in the facts of redemption, and is designed to realize the idea of grace. It is the society of the redeemed. The State aims at social order, the Church at spiritual holiness. The State looks to the visible and outward, the Church is concerned for the invisible and inward. The badge of the State's authority is the sword, by which it becomes a terror to evil doers, and a praise to them that do well. The badge of the Church's authority is the keys, by which it opens and shuts the Kingdom of Heaven, according as men are believing or impenitent. The power of the Church is exclusively spiritual, that of the State includes the exercise of force. The Constitution of the Church is a Divine revelation—the Constitution of the State must be determined by human reason and the course of Providential events. The Church has no right to construct or modify a government for the State, and the State has no right to frame a creed or polity for the Church. They are as planets moving in different orbits, and unless each is confined to its own track, the consequences may be as disastrous in the moral world as the collision of different spheres in the world of matter. It is true that there is a point at which their respective jurisdictions seem to meet—in the idea of duty. But even duty is viewed by each in very different lights. The Church enjoins it as obedience to God, and the State enforces it as the safeguard of order. But there can be no collision, unless one or the other blunders as to the things that are materially right. When the State makes wicked laws, contradicting the eternal principles of rectitude, the Church is at liberty to testify against them, and humbly to petition that they may be repealed. In like manner, if the Church becomes seditious and a disturber of the peace, the State has a right to abate the nuisance. In ordinary cases, however, there is not likely to be a collision. Among a Christian people, there is little difference of opinion as to the radical distinctions of right and wrong. The only serious danger is where moral duty is conditioned upon a political question. Under the pretext of inculcating duty, the Church may usurp the power to determine the question which conditions it, and that is precisely what she is debarred from doing. The condition must be given. She must accept it from the State, and then her own course is clear. If Cæsar is your master, then pay tribute to him; but whether the "if" holds, whether Cæsar is your master or not, whether he ever had any just authority, whether he now retains it, or has forfeited it, these are points which the Church has no commission to adjudicate.

Had these principles been steadily maintained by the Assembly at Philadelphia, it is possible that the ecclesiastical separation of the North and the South might have been deferred for years to come. Our Presbyteries, many of them, clung with tenderness to the recollections of the past. Sacred memories gathered around that venerable Church which had breathed many a storm and trained our fathers for glory. It had always been distinguished for its conservative influence, and many fondly hoped that, even in the present emergency, it would raise its placid and serene head above the tumults of popular passion, and bid defiance to the angry billows which rolled at its feet. We expected it to bow in reverence only at the name of Jesus. Many dreamed that it would utterly refuse to know either Confederates or Federalists, and utterly refuse to give any authoritative degree without a "Thus saith the Lord." It was ardently desired that the sublime spectacle might be presented of one Church upon earth combining in cordial fellowship and in holy love—the disciples of Jesus in different and even hostile lands. But, alas! for the weakness of man, these golden visions were soon dispelled. The first thing which roused our Presbyteries to look the question of separation seriously in the face, was the course of the Assembly in venturing to determine, as a Court of Jesus Christ, which it did by necessary implication, the true interpretation of the Constitution of the United States as to the kind of government it intended to form. A political theory was, to all intents and purposes, propounded, which made secession a crime, the seceding States rebellious, and the citizens who obeyed them traitors. We say nothing here as to the righteousness or unrighteousness of these decrees. What we maintain is, that, whether right or wrong, the Church had no right to make them—she transcended her sphere, and usurped the duties of the State. The discussion of these questions, we are sorry to add, was in the spirit and temper of partizan declaimers. The Assembly, driven from its ancient moorings, was tossed to and fro by the waves of popular passion. Like Pilate, it obeyed the clamor of the multitude, and though acting in the name of Jesus, it kissed the sceptre and bowed the knee to the mandates of Northern phrenzy. The Church was converted into the forum, and the Assembly was henceforward to become the arena of sectional divisions and national animosities.

We frankly admit that the mere unconstitutionality of the proceedings of the last Assembly is not, in itself considered, a sufficient ground of separation. It is the consequences of these proceedings which make them so offensive. It is the door which they open for the introduction of the worst passions of human nature into the deliberations of Church Courts. The spirit of these proceedings, if allowed to prevail, would forever banish peace from the Church, and there is no reason to hope that the tide which has begun to flow can soon be arrested. The two Confederacies hate each more intensely now than they did in May, and if their citizens should come together upon the same floor, whatever might be the errand that brought them there, they could not be restrained from smiting each other with the fist of wickedness. For the sake of peace, therefore, for Christian charity, for the honor of the Church, and for the glory of God, we have been constrained, as much as in us lies, to remove all occasion of offence. We have quietly separated, and we are grateful to God that, while leaving for the sake of peace, we leave it with the humble consciousness that we, ourselves, have never given occasion to break the peace. We have never confounded Caesar and Christ, and we have never mixed the issues of this world with the weighty matters that properly belong to us as citizens of the Kingdom of God.

2. Though the immediate occasion of separation was the course of the General Assembly at Philadelphia in relation to the Federal Government and the war, yet there is another ground on which the independent organization of the Southern Church can be amply and scripturally maintained. The unity of the Church does not require a formal bond of union among all the congregations of believers throughout the earth. It does not demand a vast imperial monarchy like that of Rome, nor a strictly universal council, like that to which the complete development of Presbyterianism would naturally give rise. The Church Catholic is one in Christ, but it is not necessarily one visible, all-absorbing organization upon earth. There is no schism where there is no breach of charity.

Churches may be perfectly at one in every principle of faith and order, and yet geographically distinct, and mutually independent. As the unity of the human race is not disturbed by its division into countries and nations, so the unity of the spiritual seed of Christ is neither broken nor impaired by separation and division into various Church constitutions. Accordingly, in the Protestant countries, Church organizations have followed national lines. The Calvinistic Churches of Switzerland are distinct from the Reformed Church of France. The Presbyterians of Ireland belong to a different Church from the Presbyterians of Scotland, and the Presbyterians of this country constitute a Church, in like manner, distinct from all other Churches on the globe. That the division into national Churches, that is, Churches bounded by national lines, is, in the present condition of human nature, a benefit, seems to us too obvious for proof. It realizes to the Church Catholic all the advantages of a division of labor. It makes a Church organization homogeneous and compact—it stimulates holy rivalry and zeal—it removes all grounds of suspicion and jealousy on the part of the State. What is lost in expansion is gained in energy. The Church Catholic, as thus divided, and yet spiritually one, divided, but not rent, is a beautiful illustration of the great philosophical principle which pervades all nature—the co-existence of the one with the many.

If it is desirable that each nation should contain a separate and an independent Church, the Presbyteries of these Confederate States need no apology for bowing to the decree of Providence, which, in withdrawing their country from the government of the United States, has, at the same time, determined that they should withdraw from the Church of their fathers. It is not that they have ceased to love it—not that they have abjured its ancient principles, or forgotten its glorious history. It is to give these same principles a richer, freer, fuller development among ourselves than they possibly could receive under foreign culture. It is precisely because we love that Church as it was, and that Church as it should be, that we have resolved, as far as in us lies, to realize its grand idea in the country, and under the Government where God has cast our lot. With the supreme control of ecclesiastical affairs in our hands, we may be able, in some competent measure, to consummate this result. In subjection to a foreign power, we could no more accomplish it than the Church in the United States could have been developed in dependence upon the Presbyterian Church of Scotland. The difficulty there would have been, not the distance of Edinburgh from New York, Philadelphia, or Charleston, but the difference in the manners, habits, customs, and ways of thinking, the social, civil, and political institutions of the people. These same difficulties exist in relation to the Confederate and United States, and render it eminently proper that the Church in each should be as separate and independent as the Governments.

In addition to this, there is one difference which so radically and fundamentally distinguishes the North and the South, that it is becoming every day more and more apparent that the religious, as well as the secular, interests of both will be more effectually promoted by a complete and lasting separation. The antagonism of Northern and Southern sentiment on the subject of slavery lies at the root of all the difficulties which have resulted in the dismemberment of the Federal Union, and involved us in the horrors of an unnatural war. The Presbyterian Church in the United States has been enabled by Divine grace to pursue, for the most part, an eminently conservative, because a thoroughly scriptural, policy in relation to this delicate question. It has planted itself upon the Word of God, and utterly refused to make slaveholding a sin, or non-slaveholding a term of communion. But though both sections are agreed as to this general principle, it is not to be disguised that the North exercises a deep and settled antipathy to slavery itself, while the South is equally zealous in its defence. Recent events can have no other effect than to confirm the antipathy on the one hand and strengthen the attachment on the other. The Northern section of the Church stands in the awkward predicament of maintaining, in one breath, that slavery is an evil which ought to be abolished, and of asserting in the next, that it is not a sin to be visited by exclusion from communion of the saints. The consequence is, that it plays partly into the hands of abolitionists and partly into the hands of slaveholders, and weakens its influence with both. It occupies the position of a prevaricating witness whom neither party will trust. It would be better, therefore, for the moral power of the Northern section of the Church to get entirely quit of the subject. At the same time, it is intuitively obvious that the Southern section of the Church, while even partially under the control of those who are hostile to slavery, can never have free and unimpeded access to the slave population. Its ministers and elders will always be liable to some degree of suspicion. In the present circumstances, Northern alliance would be absolutely fatal. It would utterly preclude the Church from a wide and commanding field of usefulness. This is too dear a price to be paid for a nominal union. We cannot afford to give up these millions of souls and consign them, so far as our efforts are concerned, to hopeless perdition, for the sake of preserving an outward unity which, after all, is an empty shadow. If we would gird ourselves heartily and in earnest, for the work which God has set before us, we must have the control of our ecclesiastical affairs, and deluge ourselves separate and independent.

And here we may venture to lay before the Christian world our views as a Church, upon the subject of slavery. We beg a candid hearing.

In the first place, we would have it distinctly understood that, in our ecclesiastical capacity, we are neither the friends nor the foes of slavery; that is to say, we have no commission either to propagate or abolish it. The policy of its existence or non-existence is a question which exclusively belongs to the State. We have no right, as a Church, to enjoin it as a duty, or to condemn it as a sin. Our business is with the duties which spring from the relation; the duties of the masters on the one hand, and of their slaves on the other. These duties we are to proclaim and enforce with spiritual sanctions. The social, civil, political problems connected with this great subject transcend our sphere, as God has not entrusted to His Church the organization of society, the construction of Government, nor the allotment of individuals to their various stations. The Church has as much right to preach to the monarchies of Europe, and the despotism of Asia, the doctrines of republican equality, as to preach to the Governments of the South the extirpation of slavery. This position is impregnable, unless it can be shown that slavery is a sin. Upon every other hypothesis, it is so clearly a question for the State, that the proposition would never for a moment have been doubted, had there not been a foregone conclusion in relation to its moral character. Is slavery, then, a sin?

In answering this question, as a Church, let it be distinctly borne in mind that the only rule of judgment is the written word of God. The Church knows nothing of the intuitions of reason or the deductions of philosophy, except those reproduced in the Sacred Canon. She has a positive constitution in the Holy Scriptures, and has no right to utter a single syllable upon any subject, except as the Lord puts words in her mouth. She is founded, in other words, upon express revelation. Her creed is an authoritative testimony of God, and not a speculation, and what she proclaims, she must proclaim with the infallible certitude of faith, and not with the hesitating assent of an opinion. The question, then, is brought within a narrow compass: Do the Scriptures directly or indirectly condemn slavery as a sin? If they do not, the dispute is ended, for the Church, without forfeiting her character, dares not go beyond them.

Now, we venture to assert that if men had drawn their conclusions upon this subject only from the Bible, it would no more have entered into any human head to denounce slavery as a sin, than to denounce monarchy, aristocracy, or poverty. The truth is, men have listened to what they falsely considered as primitive intuitions, or as necessary deductions from primitive cognitions, and then have gone to the Bible to confirm the crochets of their vain philosophy. They have gone there determined to find a particular result, and the consequence is, that they leave with having made, instead of having interpreted, Scripture. Slavery is no new thing. It has not only existed for ages in the world, but it has existed, under every dispensation of the covenant of grace, in the Church of God. Indeed, the first organization of the Church as a visible society, separate and distinct from the unbelieving world, was inaugurated in the family of a slaveholder. Among the very first persons to whom the seal of circumcision was affixed, were the slaves of the father of the faithful, some born in his house, and others bought with his money. Slavery again re-appears under the Law. God sanctions it in the first table of the Decalogue, and Moses treats it as an institution to be regulated, not abolished; legitimated, and not condemned. We come down to the age of the New Testament, and we find it again in the Churches founded by the Apostles under the plenary inspiration of the Holy Ghost. These facts are utterly amazing, if slavery is the enormous sin which its enemies represent it to be. It will not do to say that the Scriptures have treated it only in a general, incidental way, without any clear implication as to its moral character. Moses surely made it the subject of express and positive legislation, and the Apostles are equally explicit in inculcating the duties which spring from both sides of the relation. They treat slaves as bound to obey and inculcate obedience as an office of religion—a thing wholly self-contradictory, if the authority exercised over them were unlawful and iniquitous.

But what puts this subject in a still clearer light is the manner in which it is sought to extort from the Scriptures a contrary testimony. The notion of direct and explicit condemnation is given up. The attempt is to show that the genius and spirit of Christianity are opposed to it—that its great cardinal principles of virtue are utterly against it. Much stress is laid upon the Golden Rule and upon the general denunciations of tyranny and oppression. To all this we reply, that no principle is clearer than that a case positively excepted cannot be included under a general rule. Let us concede, for a moment, that the laws of love, and the condemnation of tyranny and oppression, seem logically to involve, as a result, the condemnation of slavery; yet, if slavery is afterwards expressly mentioned and treated as a lawful relation, it obviously follows, unless Scripture is to be interpreted as inconsistent with itself, that slavery is, by necessary implication, excepted. The Jewish law forbade, as a general rule, the marriage of a man with his brother's wife. The same law expressly enjoined the same marriage in a given case. The given case was, therefore, an exception, and not to be treated as a violation of the general rule. The law of love has always been the law of God. It was enunciated by Moses almost as clearly as it was enunciated by Jesus Christ. Yet, notwithstanding this law, Moses and the Apostles alike sanctioned the relation of slavery. The conclusion is inevitable, either that the law is not opposed to it, or that slavery is an excepted case.

To say that the prohibition of tyranny and oppression includes slavery, is to beg the whole question. Tyranny and oppression involve either the unjust usurpation or the unlawful exercise of power. It is the unlawfulness, either in its principle or measure, which constitutes the core of the sin. Slavery must, therefore, be proved to be unlawful, before it can be referred to any such category. The master may, indeed, abuse his power, but he oppresses not simply as a master, but as a wicked master.

But, apart from all this, the law of love is simply the inculcation of universal equity. It implies nothing as to the existence of various ranks and gradations in society. The interpretation which makes it repudiate slavery would make it equally repudiate all social, civil, and political inequalities. Its meaning is, not that we should conform ourselves to the arbitrary expectations of others, but that we should render unto them precisely the same measure which, if we were in their circumstance, it would be reasonable and just in us to demand at their hands. It condemns slavery, therefore, only upon the supposition that slavery is a sinful relation—that is, he who extracts the prohibition of slavery from the Golden Rule, begs the very point in dispute.

We cannot prosecute the argument in detail, but we have said enough, we think, to vindicate the position of the Southern Church. We have assumed no new attitude. We stand exactly where the Church of God has always stood—from Abraham to Moses, from Moses to Christ, from Christ to the Re-formers, and from the Re-formers to ourselves. We stand upon the foundation of the Prophets and Apostles, Jesus Christ himself being the chief cornerstone. Shall we be excluded from the fellowship of our brethren in other lands, because we dare not depart from the charter of our faith? Shall we be branded with the stigma of reproach, because we cannot consent to corrupt the word of God to suit the intuitions of an infidel philosophy? Shall our names be cast out as evil, and the finger of scorn pointed at us, because we utterly refuse to break our communion with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, with Moses, David, and Isaiah, with Apostles, Prophets, and Martyrs, with all the noble army of confessors who have gone to glory from slave-holding countries and from a slave-holding Church, without ever having dreamed that they were living in mortal sin, by concurring at slavery in the midst of them? If so, we shall take consolation in the cheering consciousness that the Master has accepted us. We may be denounced, despised, and cast out of the synagogues of our brethren. But while they are wrangling about the distinctions of men according to the flesh, we shall go forward in our Divine work, and confidently anticipate that, in the great day, as the consequence of our humble labors, we shall meet millions of glorified spirits, who have come up from the bondage of earth to a nobler freedom than human philosophy ever dreamed of. Others, if they please, may spend their time in declaiming on the tyranny of earthly masters; it will be our aim to resist the real tyrants which oppress the soul—Sin and Satan. These are the foes against whom we shall find it employment enough to wage a successful war. And to this holy war it is the purpose of our Church to devote itself with redoubled energy. We feel that the souls of our slaves are a solemn trust, and we shall strive to present them faultless and complete before the presence of God.

Indeed, as we contemplate their condition in the Southern States, and contrast it with that of their fathers before them, and that of their brethren in the present day in their native land, we cannot but accept it as a gracious Providence that they have been brought in such numbers to our shores, and redeemed from the bondage of barbarism and sin. Slavery to them has certainly been overruled for the greatest good. It has been a link in the wondrous chain of Providence, through which many sons and daughters have been made heirs of the heavenly inheritance. The Providential result is, of course, no justification, if the thing is intrinsically wrong; but it is certainly a matter of devout thanksgiving, and no obscure intimation of the will and purpose of God, and of the consequent duty of the Church. We cannot forbear to say, however, that the general operation of the system is kindly and benevolent; it is a real and effective discipline, and without it, we are profoundly persuaded that the African race in the midst of us can never be elevated in the scale of being. As long as that race, in its comparative degradation, co-exists, side by side, with the whites, bondage is its normal condition.

As to the endless declamation about human rights, we have only to say that human rights are not a fixed, but a fluctuating quantity. Their sum is not the same in any two nations on the globe. The rights of Englishmen are one thing, the rights of Frenchmen another. There is a minimum without which a man cannot be responsible; there is a maximum which expresses the highest degree of civilization and of Christian culture. The education of the species consists in its ascent along this line. As you go up, the number of rights increases, but the number of individuals who possess them diminishes. As you come down the line, rights are diminished, but the individuals are multiplied. It is just the opposite of the predicament scale of the logicians. There comprehension diminishes as you ascend and extension increases, and comprehension increases as you descend and extension diminishes. Now, when it is said that slavery is inconsistent with human rights, we crave to understand what point in this line is the slave conceived to occupy. There are, no doubt, many rights which belong to other men—to Englishmen, to Frenchmen, to his master, for example—which are denied to him. But is he fit to possess them? Has God qualified him to meet the responsibilities which their possession necessarily implies? His place in the scale is determined by his competency to fulfil its duties. There are other rights which he certainly possesses, without which he could neither be human nor accountable. Before slavery can be charged with doing him injustice, it must be shown that the minimum which falls to his lot at the bottom of the line is out of proportion to his capacity and culture—a thing which can never be done by abstract speculation. The truth is, the education of the human race for liberty and virtue, is a vast Providential scheme, and God assigns to every man, by a wise and holy decree, the precise place he is to occupy in the great moral school of humanity. The scholars are distributed into classes, according to their competency and progress. For God is in history.

To avoid the suspicion of a conscious weakness of our cause, when contemplated from the side of pure speculation, we may advert for a moment to those pretended intuitions which stamp the reprobation of humanity upon this ancient and hoary institution. We admit that there are primitive principles in morals which lie at the root of human consciousness. But the question is, how are we to distinguish them? The subjective feeling of certainty is no adequate criterion, as that is equally felt in reference to crochets and hereditary prejudices. The very point is to know when this certainty indicates a primitive cognition, and when it does not. There must, therefore, be some eternal test, and whatever cannot abide that test has no authority as a primary truth. That test is an inward necessity of thought, which, in all minds at the proper stage of maturity, is absolutely universal. Whatever is universal is natural. We are willing that slavery should be tried by this standard. We are willing to abide by the testimony of the race, and if man, as man, has everywhere condemned it—if all human laws have prohibited it as crime—if it stands in the same category with malice, murder, and theft; then we are willing, in the name of humanity, to renounce it, and to renounce it forever. But what if the overwhelming majority of mankind have approved it? what if philosophers and statesmen have justified it, and the laws of all nations acknowledged it? what then becomes of these luminous intuitions? They are an ignis fatuus, mistaken for a star.

We have now, brethren, in a brief compass, for the nature of this address admits only of an outline, opened to you our whole hearts upon this delicate and vexed subject. We have concealed nothing. We have sought to conciliate no sympathy by appeals to your charity. We have tried our cause by the word of God; and though protesting against its authority to judge in a question concerning the duty of the Church, we have not refused to appear at the tribunal of reason. Are we not right, in view of all the preceding considerations, in remitting the social, civil, and political problems connected with slavery to the State? Is it not a subject, save in the moral duties which spring from it, which lies beyond the province of the Church? Have we any right to make it an element in judging of Christian character? Are we not treading in the footsteps of the flock? Are we not acting as Christ and his Apostles have acted before us? Is it not enough for us to pray and labor, in our lot, that all men may be saved, without meddling as a Church with the technical distinction of their civil life. We leave the matter with you. We offer you the right hand of fellowship. It is for you to accept it or reject it. We have done our duty. We can do no more. Truth is more precious than union, and if you cast us out as sinners, the breach of charity is not with us, as long as we walk according to the light of the written word.

The ends which we propose to accomplish as a Church are the same as those which are proposed by every other Church. To proclaim God's truth as a witness to the nations; to gather his elect from the four corners of the earth; and through the Word, Ministers, and Ordinances, to train them for eternal life, is the great business of His people. The only thing that will be at all peculiar to us, is the manner in which we shall attempt to discharge our duty. In almost every department of labor, except the pastoral care of congregations, it has been usual for the Church to resort to societies more or less closely connected with itself, and yet, logically and really distinct. It is our purpose to rely upon the regular organs of our government, and executive agencies directly and immediately responsible to them. We wish to make the Church, not merely a superintendent, but an agent. We wish to develop the idea that the congregation of believers, as visibly organized, is the very society or corporation which is divinely called to do the work of the Lord. We shall, therefore, endeavor to do what has never yet been adequately done—bring out the energies of our Presbyterian system of government. From the Session to the Assembly we shall strive to enlist all our courts, as courts, in every department of Christian effort. We are not ashamed to confess that we are intensely Presbyterian. We embrace all other denominations in the arms of Christian fellowship and love, but our own scheme of government we humbly believe to be according to the pattern shown in the Mount, and, by God's grace, we propose to put its efficiency to the test.

Brethren, we have done. We have told you who we are, and what we are. We greet you in the ties of Christian brotherhood. We desire to cultivate peace and charity with all our fellow Christians throughout the world. We invite to ecclesiastical communion all who maintain our principles of faith and order. And now we commend you to God and the word of His grace. We devoutly pray that the whole Catholic Church may be afresh baptized with the Holy Ghost, and that she may speedily be stirred up to give the Lord no rest until he establish and make Jerusalem a praise in the earth.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF 1862.

May 1—The body met in Montgomery, Alabama—31 ministers and 16 elders present.

The following is the Narrative on the State of Religion, reported by Rev. J. L. Girardeau, Chairman of the Committee:

It is but a few months since the first General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the Confederate States was organized, and our Zion was equipped for her great and distinctive work. We desire at this, our second meeting, to render devout thanksgiving to our Divine Lord and Head for the abundant favor which he has manifested to our Church in entering upon that new and solemn path of our duty to which his Providence has so clearly pointed her. Having, as she conceived, a Divine call to set up her banners as an independent organization, she has not been destitute of the Divine blessing in obeying it, and we trust will be yet more and more richly endowed for prosecuting as well the enterprises peculiarly entrusted to her as the general labors which are assigned to every church of the Redeemer.

We have to regret that in consequence of the distracted condition of the country, but few reports of our Presbyteries, touching the state of religion, have come up to us. All the Presbyteries which have reported dwell upon the war in which we are now engaged, and its influence upon the religious interests of the Church. In the first place, we notice the relation of our congregations to the great struggle in which we are engaged. All the Presbyterian narratives, without exception, mention the fact that their congregations have evinced the most cordial sympathy with the people of the Confederate States in their efforts to maintain their cherished rights and institutions against the despotic power which is attempting to crush them. Deeply convinced that this struggle is not alone for civil rights, and property, and home, but also for religion, for the Church, for the gospel, and for existence itself, the churches in our connection have freely contributed to its prosecution of their substance, their prayers, and above all of their members and the beloved youth of their congregations. They have parted without a murmur with those who constitute the hope of the Church, and have bidden them go forth to the support of this great and sacred cause with their benedictions and with their supplications for their protection and success. The Assembly desire to record with its solemn approval this fact of the unanimity of our people in supporting a contest to which religion, as well as patriotism, now summons the citizens of this country, and to implore for them the blessing of God in the course which they are now pursuing. In this connection we would notice the fact that some of our ministers have entered the army as chaplains, and in the joint capacity of chaplains and soldiers, and are thus discharging a most important and useful office. One of these, a member of South Alabama Presbytery, is now a prisoner in the hands of the enemy; and another, Rev. Dabney Carr Harrison, a member of East Hanover Presbytery, a chaplain and an officer, fell mortally wounded at Fort Donelson, Tenn., while lending his men in one of the bloodiest battles fought in this war. His name will be enshrined in the hearts of his countrymen, and will be held in veneration by the Church of which he was an ornament. In the second place, the spiritual condition of the Church as affected by the war. In some Presbyteries a number of congregations have been disbanded, and their members driven from their homes as refugees, seeking an asylum among strangers. In other places prayer meetings are held, and in one or two Presbyteries, revivals of religion have been manifested. The different denominations of Christians have been drawn together by a common danger, and union prayer meetings have been abundant. In the third place, the efforts made to extend the kingdom of Christ have been preserved in some churches. The collections for Foreign Missions and other objects of benevolence have been increased, and the Churches were about taking up the subject of Domestic Missions with vigor, when the assault of the enemy upon the city of New Orleans, and the consequent removal of the seat of operations of the Assembly's Committee, has delayed the prosecution of their plans. Nearly all the Presbyteries make special mention that religious instruction is faithfully imparted to the colored people. We cannot but rejoice in this intelligence. We have the motives to the discharge of a great missionary work, springing from the bosom of every family and the cabins of every plantation.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF 1864.

May 5—The body met in Charlotte, North Carolina—37 Ministers and 27 Elders present.

Reports made to the Assembly state that there are seven students at the Theological Seminary in Columbia, and one in Union Seminary, Virginia. MacLean was fixed for the meeting of 1865.

UNION OF THE OLD AND NEW SCHOOL CHURCHES.

The Lynchburg Virginian of August, 1864, thus notices the meeting of the "United Synod of the Presbyterian Church:"

This body has been in session for several days in that city. But few ministers are present owing to the presence of the enemy in many portions of the South. The most important business executed by the body has been the consummation of the plan for uniting the two branches of the Church. The old and new schools are now one.

RELIGIOUS INSTRUCTION OF SLAVES.

In Harmony Presbytery, (S. C.,) October, 1863, a report of the Committee on the religious instruction of the colored people, written by Rev. J. Leighton Wilson, D. D., contains these recommendations:

1. That every Christian master should aim to have his negroes attend the same place of worship with himself.
2. That a small chapel should be erected on every plantation, where the black people might be assembled every Sabbath afternoon for religious worship, and where they may be taught hymns, portions of Scripture, and receive catechetical instruction.
3. That the servants of every plantation should be assembled at least once a day in the chapel for prayers.
4. That the household servants should be required to attend morning and evening prayers with the white family.
5. That some measures be adopted by Presbytery in regard to the baptism of children of believing colored parents.
6. That the Presbytery exert all the influence possible to render sacred and permanent the marriage relation between the colored people, and especially among the members of the Church.

AN EAST TENNESSEE CHURCH.

Rev. Dr. Vance's Church—Baker's Creek Church, Blount county, East Tennessee—never united with the Presbyterian Church South; and the session did not hold a regular meeting between September, 1861, and May 10, 1864. The Presbytery of Knoxville, at an adjourned meeting held at Pleasant Forrest Church, Knox county, on the Friday preceding the second Sabbath of September, 1861, passed resolutions announcing their withdrawal from the General Assembly in the United States, and recommended action for the immediate organization of a Southern Assembly. Rev. Dr. Vance and J. H. McConnell, the Ruling Elder of Baker's Creek Church, resisted this action; and declared their continued adherence to the old Assembly.

BAPTIST.

In November, 1860, the Alabama State Convention of Baptists unanimously passed a declaration, setting forth that the Union had failed, in important particulars, to answer the purpose for which it was created." The declaration closed with the following announcement:

While, as yet, no particular mode of relief is before us on which to express an opinion, we are constrained, before separating to our several homes, to declare to our brethren and fellow-citizens, before mankind and before our God, that we hold ourselves subject to the call of proper authority in defence of the sovereignty and independence of the State of Alabama, and of her right, as a sovereignty, to withdraw from this Union, and to make any arrangement which her people, in constitutional assemblies, may deem best for securing their rights. And in this declaration we heartily, deliberately, unanimously, and solemnly unite.

GEORGIA BAPTIST CONVENTION, 1861.

April 29—The body met at Athens, and adopted, unanimously, these resolutions, which were transmitted to the "Confederate" Congress by Rev. H. M. Crawford:

Whereas the State Convention of Georgia, in the legitimate exercise of her sovereignty, has withdrawn from the Confederacy known as the United States of America, and, for the better maintenance of her rights, honor, and independence, has united with other States in a new Confederacy, under the title of the Confederate States of America; and whereas Abraham Lincoln is attempting, by force of arms, to subjugate these States, in violation of the fundamental principle of American liberty; therefore,

Resolved by the members of the Baptist Convention of the State of Georgia, That we consider it at once to be a pleasure and a duty to avow that both in feeling and principle, we approve, indorse, and support the Government of the Confederate States of America.

2. That while this Convention disclaims all authority, whether ecclesiastical or civil, yet as citizens we deem it a duty to urge the union of all the people of the South in defence of the Common Cause, and to express the confident belief that in whatever conflict the madness of Mr. Lincoln and his Government may force upon us, the Baptists of Georgia will not be behind any class of our fellow-citizens in maintaining the independence of the South by any sacrifice of treasure or of blood.

3. That we acknowledge with devout thanksgiving to Almighty God, the signal favor with which, up to this time, He has blessed our arms and our policy, and that the Baptist Churches of this State be requested to observe the first and second days of June next, as days of fasting and prayer, that God will deliver us from all the power of our enemies, and restore peace to our country.

4. That the Confederate Government be requested to invite the Churches of all denominations within the Confederacy to unite in observing said days of prayer and fasting.

5. That copies of these resolutions be sent to President Davis, the Confederate Congress, and the Governor of Georgia.

SOUTHERN BAPTIST CONVENTION, 1861.

May 13—The body met in Savannah; when the following report, said to have been drawn by Rev. Dr. R. Fuller, was unanimously adopted:

We hold this truth to be self-evident, that governments are established for the security, prosperity and happiness of the people. When, therefore, any government is perverted from its proper designs, becomes oppressive, and abuses its power, the people have a right to change it.

As to the States once combined upon this continent, it is now manifest that they can no longer live together as one confederacy.

The Union constituted by our forefathers was one of coequal sovereign States. The fanatical spirit of the North has long been seeking to deprive us of rights and franchises guaranteed by the Constitution; and after years of persistent aggression, they have at last accomplished their purpose.

In vindication of their sacred rights and honor, in self defence, and for the protection of all which is dear to man, the Southern States have practically asserted the right of seceding from a union so degenerated from that established by the Constitution, and they have formed for themselves a government based upon the principles of the original compact—adopting a charter which secures to each State its sovereign rights and privileges. This new government, in thus dissolving former political connections, seeks to cultivate relations of amity and good will, with its late confederates and with all the world; and they have thence sent special commissioners to Washington with overtures of peace, and for a fair, amicable adjustment of all difficulties. The Government at Washington has insultingly repelled these proposals, and now insists upon letting loose hordes of armed soldiers to pillage and desolate the entire South, for the purpose of forcing the seceded States back into unnatural union, or of subjugating them and holding them as conquered provinces.

While the two sections of the land are thus arrayed against each other, it might naturally have been hoped that at least the churches of the North would interpose and protest against this appeal to the sword, this invoking of civil war, this deluging the country in fratricidal blood; but with astonishment and grief, we find churches and pastors of the North breathing out slaughter, and clamoring for sanguinary hostilities with a fierceness which we would have supposed impossible among the disciples of the Prince of Peace.

In view of such premises, this Convention cannot keep silence. Recognizing the necessity that the whole moral influence of the people, in whatever capacity or organization, should be enlisted in aid of the rulers who, by their suffrages, have been called to defend the endangered interests of person and property, of honor and liberty, it is bound to utter its voice distinctly, decidedly, emphatically; and your Committee recommend, therefore, the subjoined resolutions:

Resolved, That impartial history cannot charge upon the South the dissolution of the Union. She was foremost in advocating and cementing that Union. To that Union she clung through long years of calumny, injury, and insult. She has never ceased to raise her warning appeals against the fanaticism which has obstinately and incessantly warred against that Union.

2. That we most cordially approve of the formation of the government of the Confederate States of America, and admire and applaud the noble course of that government up to this present time.

3. That we should assiduously invoke the Divine direction and favor in behalf of those who bear rule among us, that they may still exercise the same wise, prompt, elevated statesmanship which has hitherto characterized their measures: that their enterprises may be attended with success; and that they may attain a great reward, not only in seeing these Confederate States prosper under their administration, but in contributing to the progress of the transcendent kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ.

4. That we most cordially tender to the President of the Confederate States, to his Cabinet, and the members of the Congress now convened at Montgomery, the assurances of our sympathy and entire confidence. With them are our hearts and our hearty co-operation.

5. That the lawless reign of terror at the North, the violence committed upon unoffending citizens, above all, the threats to wage upon the South a warfare of savage barbarity, to devastate our homes and hearths with hordes of ruffians and felons burning with lust and rapine, ought to excite the horror of all civilized people. God forbid that we should so far forget the spirit of Jesus as to suffer malice and vindictiveness to insinuate themselves into our hearts; but every principle of religion, of patriotism, and of humanity, calls upon us to pledge our fortunes and lives in the good work of repelling an invasion designed to destroy whatever is dear to our heroic traditions; whatever is sweet in our domestic hopes and enjoyments; whatever is essential to our institutions and our very manhood; whatever is worth living or dying for.

6. That we do now engage in prayer for our friends, brothers, fathers, sons, and citizen soldiers, who have left their homes to go forth for the defence of their families and friends and all which is dearest to the human heart; and we recommend to the churches represented in this body, that they constantly invoke a holy and merciful God to guard them from the temptations to which they are exposed, to cover their head in the day of battle, and to give victory to their arms.

7. That we will pray for our enemies in the spirit of that Divine Master, who "when He was reviled, He reviled not again," trusting that their pitiless purposes, may be frustrated, that God will grant to them a more politic, a more considerate, and a more Christian mind; that the fratricidal strife which they have decided upon, notwithstanding all our commissions and pleas for peace, may be arrested by the Supreme Power, who maketh the wrath of man to praise Him; and that thus, through a divine blessing, the prosperity of these sovereign and once allied States, may be restored under the two governments to which they now and henceforth respectively belong.

8. That we do recommend to the churches of the Baptist denomination in the Southern States to observe the 1st and 2d days of June as days of humiliation, fasting, and prayer to Almighty God, that he may avert any calamities due to our sins as a people, and may look with mercy and favor upon us.

9. That whatever calamities may come upon us, our firm trust and hope are in God, through the atonement of His Son, and we earnestly beseech the churches represented in this body, (a constituency of six or seven hundred thousand Christians,) that they be fervent and importunate in prayer, not only for the country, but for the enterprises of the Gospel which have been committed to our care. In the war of the Revolution, and in the war of 1812, the Baptist bated not of heart or hope for the Redeemer's cause. Their zeal and liberality abounded in their deepest afflictions. We beseech the churches to cherish the spirit and imitate the example of this noble army of saints and heroes; to be followers of them who, through faith and patience, inherit the promises; to be steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as they know that their labor is not in vain in the Lord.

10. That these resolutions be communicated to the Congress of the "Confederate States" at Montgomery, with the signatures of the President and Secretaries of the Convention.

BAPTIST CONVENTION OF SOUTH CAROLINA, 1861.

July 25—The body met at Spartanburg—Hon. J. B. O'Neill, President; Rev. Mr. Landrum, Vice-President; Rev. Mr. Breaker, Secretary; Prof. Judson, Treasurer.

On the State of the Country, the following resolution, offered by Dr. W. Curtis, was unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That in the present peculiar condition of our political affairs, it becomes us thus to assure our beloved country of our sympathies, prayers, and thanksgiving on her behalf; that so far as we can understand the remarkable openings and guidance of Divine Providence, we have but received, in almost every instance, the merciful blessings of our God as approbation upon the plans our State and the Southern Confederacy have deemed it best to adopt—that now especially, in the unprecedented, vindictive, and deadly strife against us, to which those who but recently spoke of us as brethren are urging one another, we can but rejoice in the oneness of our brethren of this State, in prayer and effort, to defend our homes, our liberties, and our churches; and encourage them to be assured, that, as hitherto, putting our faith in God, though each of us may have much to bear, yet the rod will not finally rest upon us, but that in this most wicked attack upon our otherwise peaceful homes, the wickedness of the wicked will return on their own heads.

MARRIAGE OF SLAVES.

The Baptist Association of Georgia, in its meeting of 1864, adopted this resolution:

Resolved, That it is the firm belief and conviction of this body that the institution of marriage was ordained by Almighty God for the benefit of the whole human race, without respect to color; that it ought to be maintained in its original purity among all classes of people, and in all countries, and in all ages until the end of time; and that, consequently, the law of Georgia, in its failure to recognize and protect this relation between our slaves, is essentially defective, and ought to be amended.

PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL.

DIOCESE OF ALABAMA, 1861.

May—The Protestant Episcopal Convention of Alabama adopted this ordinance:

Whereas the Constitution of the Diocese of Alabama was adopted when the said Diocese actually was, on the presumption of its continuing to be, a part of the "Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States;" and whereas the State of Alabama is no longer a part of the United States, therefore it is hereby declared by this Convention that the first article of the Constitution of the Diocese, with all those canons, or portions of canons, dependent upon it, are null and void. It is furthermore declared that all canons, or portions of canons, both Diocesan and general, not necessarily dependent upon the recognition of the authority of the Church in the United States, are hereby retained in force. This declaration is not to be construed as affecting faith, doctrine or communion.

The form of service in the seceded States passed through several transformations. First the Governor of every seceded State was substituted in the public prayer for the President of the United States. Then the Governors gave way to the President of the Southern Confederacy. An example of these variations is found in the following pastoral letter of the Bishop of the diocese of Louisiana:

To the Clergy of the Diocese of Louisiana:

The progress of affairs makes it expedient to direct further changes in the public service of the Church.

In the prayer for those in civil authority, for the words "the President of the United States," substitute the words "the President of the Confederate States."

In the special prayer set forth in my letter of the 30th ultimo, for the words "and the Convention of Southern States," substitute the words "and the Congress of the Confederate States."

The prayer for the Legislature, as already indicated, will be continued during its sessions.

I remain, very truly, your servant in Christ,

LEONIDAS POLK,

Bishop of the Diocese of Louisiana.

NEW ORLEANS, Feb. 20, 1861.

A pastoral letter from Bishop Polk, of that diocese, contains this passage:

"Our separation from our brethren of 'The Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States' has been effected, because we must follow our nationality. Not because there has been any difference of opinion as to Christian doctrine or catholic usage. Upon these points we are still one. With us it is a separation, not a division—certainly not alienation. And there is no reason why, if we should find the union of our dioceses under our national Church impracticable, we should cease to feel for each other the respect and regard with which purity of manners, high principle, and a manly devotion to truth never fail to inspire generous minds. Our relations to each other hereafter will be the relations we both now hold to the men of our mother Church of England."

"CONFEDERATE" EPISCOPAL CHURCH, 1861.

November—At a General Convention held in Columbia, S. C., the Constitution of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the Confederate States of America was adopted—all the bishops present except Bishop Polk,* with a full attendance of clerical and lay deputies; Bishop Meade presided. The Richmond Examiner of Nov. 14 says:

The general tone of its deliberations, though entirely free from asperity toward the Church of the North, gave evidence of a deep and settled conviction, on every hand, that the separation in church organization, like that in civil government, was, and ought to be, complete and perpetual.

PASTORAL LETTER OF THE BISHOPS, 1862.

Nov. 22—The session of the First General Council, held at Augusta, was closed by reading an Address, from which these extracts are made:

Seldom has any Council assembled in the Church of Christ under circumstances needing His presence more urgently than this which is now about to submit its conclusions to the judgment of the Universal Church. Forced by the Providence of God to separate ourselves from the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States—a Church with whose doctrine, discipline, and worship we are in entire harmony, and with whose action, up to the time of that separation, we were abundantly satisfied—at a moment when civil strife had dipped its foot in blood, and cruel war was desolating our homes and firesides, we required a double measure of grace to preserve the accustomed moderation of the Church in the arrangement of organic law, in the adjustment of our code of canons, but above all, in the preservation, without change, of those rich treasures of doctrine and worship which have come to us enshrined in our Book of Common Prayer.

The Constitution of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the Confederate States, under which we have been exer-

* A correspondent of the New Orleans Picayune, writing from Richmond, gives these curious particulars of the way in which Right Rev. Dr. Polk, Bishop of the Episcopal Church for the Diocese of Louisiana, came to forsake the gown for the sword:

"The Right Rev. Leonidas Polk, of Louisiana, has been commissioned Major General in the army of the Confederate States. The appointment has been urged upon Bishop Polk for several weeks, but he has had some hesitation in accepting it. A few days since he paid a visit to the venerable Bishop Meade, at his home near Winchester, to consult with him about it. The result was that he has concluded to accept it.

"Bishop Meade told him truly that he already held a commission in a very different army, to which he held allegiance 'till life's journey ends.'

"I know that very well," replied Bishop Polk, "and I do not intend to resign it. On the contrary, I shall only prove the more faithful to it by doing all that in me lies to bring this unhallowed and unnatural war to a speedy and happy close. We of the Confederate States are the last bulwarks of civil and religious liberty; we fight for our hearthstones and our altars; above all we fight for a race that has been by Divine Providence entrusted to our most sacred keeping. When I accept a commission in the Confederate army, therefore, I not only perform the duties of a good citizen, but contend for the principles which lie at the foundation of our social, political, and religious polity."

Bishop Burgess, of Maine, in addressing the Diocesan Convention of that State, thus alluded to this circumstance:

"It is probably stated, with every appearance of authenticity, that one of the Southern Bishops of our Church has accepted a high command in the army of the revolted States. The present remark will be withheld from the press, unless the statement should be confirmed. If it be true, it is an act of dishonor to the Episcopate, unparalleled except in the darkest periods and the most corrupt communions. The hands of the ministry were always held back from bloodshed, even though the cause were most just."

cising our legislative functions, is the same as that of the Church from which we have been providentially separated, save that we have introduced into it a germ of expansion which was wanting in the old constitution. This is found in the permission which is granted to existing Dioceses to form themselves by subdivision into Provinces, and by this process gradually to reduce our immense Dioceses into Episcopal Sees, more like those which in primitive times covered the territories of the Roman Empire. * *

The Prayer Book we have left untouched in every particular save where a change of our civil government and the formation of a new nation have made alteration essentially requisite. Three words comprise all the amendment which has been deemed necessary in the present emergency, for we have felt unwilling, in the existing confusion of affairs, to lay rash hands upon the Book, consecrated by the use of ages, and hallowed by associations the most sacred and precious.

Our next source of encouragement is that we enter upon our work with our Dioceses fully organized, and with the means which Christ has instituted in His Church well distributed throughout the Confederate States. When we remember the very different auspices under which the venerated Fathers of the American Church began their work, and mark how it has grown and prospered, we should indeed take courage and feel no fear for the future. In their case all their ecclesiastical arrangements had to be organized; in our case we find these arrangements all ready to our hand, and with the seal of a happy experience stamped upon them. In their case every prejudice of the land was strong against them. In our case we go forward with the leading minds of our new Republic cheering us on by their communion with us, and with no prejudications to overcome, save those which arise from a lack of acquaintance with our doctrine and worship. In their case they were indeed few and separated far from one another in their work upon the walls of Zion. In our case we are comparatively well compacted, extending in an unbroken chain of Dioceses from the Potomac to the confines of the Republic. Beside all these disadvantages, "the little one became a thousand and the small one a strong nation," and shall we despond? If we be watchful, and strengthen the things that remain, our God will not forsake us, but will "lengthen our cords and stretch forth the curtains of our habitations." In visible token of this fact, we have already, since our organization, added to the House of Bishops the Rt. Rev. Dr. Wilmer as Bishop of Alabama, and received into communion with the Church the Diocese of Arkansas.

Another source of encouragement is that there has been no division in the Church in the Confederate States. Believing, with a wonderful unanimity, that the providence of God had guided our footsteps, and for His own inscrutable purposes had forced us into a separate organization, there has been nothing to embarrass us in the preliminary movements which have conducted us to our present position. With one mind and with one heart we have entered upon this blessed work, and we stand together this day a band of brothers, one in faith, one in hope, one in charity. There may be among us, as there always must be, minute differences of opinion and feeling, but there is nothing to hinder our keeping the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace. We are all satisfied that we are walking in the path of duty, and that the light of God's countenance has been wonderfully lifted up upon us. He has comforted us in our darkest hours, and has not permitted our hearts to faint in the day of adversity. * *

Many of the States of this Confederacy are Missionary ground. The population is sparse and scattered; the children of the Church are few and far between; the Priests of the Lord can reach them only after great labor and privation. Hitherto has their scanty subsistence been ekeed out from the common treasury of our united Church. Cut off from that recourse by our political action, in which they have heartily acquiesced, they turn to us and pray us to do at least as much for them, as we have been accustomed to do for the Church from which they have been separated by a civil necessity. We can do what they ask, and we ought cheerfully to do it. * *

The time has come when the Church should press more urgently than she has hitherto done upon her laity, the solemn fact, that the slaves of the South are not merely so much property, but are a sacred trust committed to us, as a people, to be prepared for the work which God may have for them to do in the future. While under this tutelage He freely gives to us their labor, but expects us to give back to them that religious and moral instruction which is to elevate them in the scale of being. And while inculcating this truth, the Church must offer more freely her ministrations for their benefit and improvement. Her laity must set the example of readiness to fulfill their duty towards these people, and her clergy must strip themselves of pride and fastidiousness and indolence, and rush with the zeal of martyrs, to this labor of love. The teachings of the Church are those which best suit a people passing from ignorance to civilization, because while it represses all fanaticism, it fastens upon the memory the great facts of our religion, and through its objective worship attracts and enchains them. So far from relaxing, in their case, the forms of the Church, good will be permanently done to them just in proportion as we teach them through their senses and their affections. If subjected to the teachings of a bald spiritualism, they will find food for their senses and their child-like fancies in superstitious observances of their own, leading too often to crime and licentiousness.

It is likewise the duty of the Church to press upon the masters of the country their obligation, as Christian men, so to arrange this institution as not to necessitate the violation of those sacred relations which God has created, and which man cannot, consistently with Christian duty, annul. The systems of labor which prevail in Europe and which are, in many respects, more severe than ours, are so arranged as to prevent all necessity for the separation of parents and children, and of husbands and wives, and a very little care upon our part, would rid the system upon which we are about to plant our national life, of these unchristian features. It belongs, especially, to the Episcopal Church to urge a proper teaching upon this subject, for in her fold and in her congregations are found a very large proportion of the great slaveholders of the country. We rejoice to be enabled to say that the public sentiment is rapidly becoming sound upon this subject, and that the Legislatures of several of the Confederate States have already taken steps towards this consummation. Hitherto have we been hindered by the pressure of abolitionism; now that we have thrown off from us that hateful and infidel pestilence, we should prove to the world that we are faithful to our trust, and the Church should lead the hosts of the Lord in this work of justice and of mercy.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL.

It is difficult to get information respecting this Church. Its General Conference was to have been held in 1862, in New Orleans, but the city fell before that date; and there has been no meeting of the body since. Its book concern (in Nashville) came into our possession at an early day, and is under proceedings of confiscation. Few of the Annual Conferences have been held, and the organization of the Church appears to have been almost wrecked by the war. It separated in 1845, from the Methodist Church North, on the Slavery Question.

This item appeared in one of the Georgia newspapers:

August 1, 1864.—Bishop Pierce, of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, calls upon the Methodists of the State to meet on Wednesday, August 10, for special prayer for victory and the expulsion of the foe from our State.

CATHOLIC.

No Church body appears to have taken action.

Bishop Lynch of Charleston early espoused the "Confederate" cause, and early in 1861 had a correspondence with Archbishop Hughes on the rightfulness of secession. He has since been in Europe as Confederate agent.

In 1861, the New Orleans Catholic Standard published these editorial articles:

Let no Southern child be educated outside the limits of the Confederate States. We have excellent schools and colleges at Richmond and Norfolk in Virginia; at Charleston and Columbia in South Carolina; at Savannah and Augusta in Georgia; at St. Augustine in Florida; at Mobile in Alabama; at Bay St. Louis, Pass Christian, Sulphur Springs, Vicksburg, and Natchez, Mississippi; at Fort Smith, Helena and Little Rock in Arkansas; at Marks-ville and Memphis in Tennessee; at Galveston, New Braunfels, San Antonio, Brownsville, and Liberty in Texas; and at St. Michael's, Grand Coteau, Vermillionville, Thibodaux, Donaldsonville, Natchitoches, Avoyelles, Alexandria, Shreveport, Iberville, Algiers, and New Orleans in Louisiana. The social bonds between us and the Catholics at the North have been severed by them. We acknowledge them no longer as our countrymen. They and their institutions have no claims upon us.

Our Charleston brother is not alone in the satisfaction he feels at the loyalty of the Catholic Celts to their adopted State. We are proud in being able to claim similar honors for our Hibernian friends. A very large majority of what is styled the Irish vote in this city, was cast for the Secession ticket. Precincts where the Irish formerly testified their devotion to the Union, by heavy majorities for the so-called Union ticket, gave in the recent elections either majorities for Secession or reduced the co-operation majority to a mere trifle. We are proud to say that this is not only true of the Celts, in particular, but of our entire Catholic population, a very large majority of whom voted the Secession ticket. Of practical Catholics, probably 19 out of every 20 who voted gave it their support. Religion, of course, was not directly involved in the question, but it is quite impossible to discover patriotism from religion in the Catholic heart. That is a Union which cannot be dissolved. Even the wayward Catholic youth whose passions have led him astray from the house of his Father, and who has for years neglected his loving bounty, cannot have his patriotism aroused without at once burning with reawakened love and duty to his soul's true home. We cannot conceive such an impossibility as a Catholic heart in which Patriotism and Religion do not throb together. Like the Hibernians in Charleston, their countrymen in New Orleans, many of whom were partisans of Mr. Douglas, have organized military companies, not for mere pastime, but for work, and are ready for the struggle whenever the arrogant North shall presume to force it upon us.

THE POPE'S REPLY TO THE REBEL COMMISSIONERS.

HONORABLE GENTLEMEN: Mr. Soutter has handed me your letter of November 11, with which, in conformity to the instructions of your Government, you have sent me a copy of the manifesto issued by the Congress of the Confederate States and approved by the most honorable President, in order that the attention of the Government of the Holy See, to whom, as well as to the other Governments, you have addressed yourselves, might be called to it. The sentiments expressed in the manifesto, tending as they do to the cessation of the most bloody war which still rages in your countries, and the putting an end to the disasters which accompany it by proceeding to negotiations for peace, being entirely in accordance with the disposition and character of the august head of the Catholic Church, I did not hesitate a moment in bringing it to the notice of the Holy Father. His Holiness, who has been deeply afflicted by the accounts of the frightful carnage of this obstinate struggle, has heard with satisfaction the expression of the same sentiments. Being the vicar on earth of that God who is the author of peace, he yearns to see these wraths appeased and peace restored. In proof of this he wrote to the Archbishops of New York and New Orleans, as far back as October 18, 1862, inviting them to exert themselves in bringing about this holy object. You may then, honorable gentlemen, feel well assured that whenever a favorable occasion shall present itself, His Holiness will not fail to avail himself of it, to hasten so desirable a result, and that all nations may be united in the bonds of charity.

In acquainting you with this benignant disposition of the Holy Father, I am pleased to declare myself, with sentiments of the most distinguished esteem, truly your servant,

G. CARD. ANTONELLI.

CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION, 1861.

The Young Men's Christian Association of New Orleans, under date of May 22, issued an "Address to the Young Men's Christian Associations of North America," in which they say:

We wish you to feel with us, that there is a terrible responsibility now resting upon us all as Christians, in this trying time of our country. * * * We in the South are satisfied in our judgments, and in our hearts, that the political severance of the Southern from the Northern States is permanent, and SHOULD BE SATISFACTORY. We believe that reason, history, and knowledge of human nature, will suggest the folly and futility of a war to re-establish a political union between the severed sections. * * * Has it not occurred to you, brethren, that the hand of God MAY BE in this political division, that both governments may more effectually work out His designs in the regeneration of the world? While such a possibility may exist, let His people be careful not to war against His will. It is not pretended that the war is to maintain religious freedom, or extend the kingdom of Christ. Then, God's people should beware how they wage or encourage it. In the name of Christ and His divine teachings, we protest against the war which the Government at Washington is waging against the territory and people of the Southern States; and we call upon all the Young Men's Christian Associations in the North to unite with us in this solemn protest.

ADDRESS OF THE "CONFEDERATE" CLERGY, 1863.

ADDRESS TO CHRISTIANS THROUGHOUT THE WORLD, BY THE CLERGY OF THE CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA.

CHRISTIAN BROTHERN,—In the name of our Holy Christianity, we address you in this form, respecting matters of great interest to us, which we believe deeply concern the cause of our Blessed Master, and to which we invoke your serious attention.

We speak not in the spirit of controversy, not by political inspiration, but as the servants of the Most High God, we speak the "truth in love," concerning things which make for peace.

In the midst of war—surrounded by scenes that pain the souls of all good men—deploring the evils which are inseparable from national contentions—we feel most deeply impressed by the conviction, that for our own sake, for the sake of our posterity, for the sake of humanity, for the sake of the truth, and, above all, for the sake of our Redeemer's Kingdom, it behoves us to testify of certain things in our beloved land, which seem to be neither understood nor appreciated by our enemies, nor yet clearly appreciated by Christians of other nations.

We put forth this address after much prayer, solemnly invoking the blessing of Almighty God, and committing what we say to that Providence by which we trust we are directed, and by whose authority and power the governments of the earth stand or fall.

If we were moved to make this address by any fears of the final issue of the war in which our country is now engaged, by any inclination to meddle with political questions, by any desire to resume controversy in respect to matters which have been referred to the arbitration of the sword; if indeed anything that compromised the simplicity, dignity, and purity of Christian duty moved us to issue this address, we should deserve to have it despised by you, and could hope for no blessing of God to rest upon it. But for all that we say in the following declarations, we are willing to be judged by succeeding generations, and to answer in that day when the secrets of all hearts shall be made known.

We do not propose to discuss the causes of the war. They are matters of recent history, easily known and read of all men. To discuss them would obviously involve much more than, as Christian ministers, we feel it our province to argue.

We submit for your consideration as the first point of our testimony and ground of protest,—

That the war waged against our people, in principle and in fact, proposes to achieve that which, in the nature of the case, it is impossible to accomplish by violence. The war proposes the restoration of the Union.

We can rationally suppose a war for conquest, or to expel an invader, or to compel respect for stipulations of peace and international intercourse which have been violated; but how measures of violence can reunite independent States, restore their broken fellowship, re-establish equality of representatives' rights, or coerce a people to brotherly kindness, unity, and devotion to each other, is utterly beyond our conception.

But if our enemies be disingenuous in their professions—if they fight not to recover seceded States, but to subjugate them, what promise do men find in the numbers, intelligence, courage, resources, and moral energies of the millions who inhabit the Confederate States, that such a people can ever become profitable or happy, as subordinate to mere military force? If subjugation, therefore, were possible, is it desirable? Would the United States gain anything? Would Christian civilization gain anything? Said a great British statesman in 1775, when arguing in favor of adopting conciliatory measures in respect to the revolted colonies of America—colonies, not seceding States—that were in actual rebellion against their sovereign: "The use of force is but temporary. It may subdue for a moment, but it does not remove the necessity for subduing again; and a nation is not governed which is perpetually to be conquered. My next objection is its uncertainty. Terror is not always the effect of force, and an armament is not a victory. * * * A further objection to force is that you impair the object by your very endeavors to preserve it. The thing you fought for is not the thing you recover."

Christian brethren, could the hand of violence win you to desire fellowship with a people while it destroyed your peace, polluted your sanctuaries, invaded the sacred precincts of your homes, robbed you of your property, slaughtered your noble sons, clothed your daughters in grief, filled your land with sorrow, and employed its utmost strength to reduce your country to the degradation of a subjugated province? Would it not rather animate you to prefer death—honorable death—the patriot's alternative, the Christian's martyrdom?

As an excuse for violence, our enemies charge that the Confederate States have attempted to overthrow the "best Government on earth;" and call us "traitors," "rebels." We deny the charge; and as to the epithets, if they defined our position, under the circumstances, we could glory in them, as do the people of God when persecuted for truth and conscience's sake. But we regard such terms as gratuitously assuming the very point at issue. If employed sincerely, we will not complain; but we are persuaded that many have uttered these expressions under the influence of resentful feelings, who would not otherwise assert the political doctrines they imply. We are not disposed to engage in an angry retort, and only mention these things to show that we appreciate them.

It will appear singular when men reflect upon it, that so many intelligent and Christian people should desire to withdraw from the "the best Government on earth." And we need not discuss the kindness of those who so generously propose to confer on us by force of arms "the best Government."

No attempt has been made to overthrow the Government of the United States, unless by the fanatical party which now administers its affairs. The South never entertained such an idea. If that Government fall for lack of Southern support, let men discriminate between the downfall of an oppression when the oppressed have escaped, and a wanton effort to break up good government. So Pharaoh fell, but not by the hand of Israel. The dismemberment of the Union by secession was not a blow at the Government. It was for our own deliverance. It was an election of the people, only hastened and rendered in some cases imperative by the violent movements of the Executive of the United States. Virginia may be referred to as an illustration. That State was not willing to secede hastily; but the demand of President Lincoln, that she furnish troops to fight her sister States, ended all hesitation. At once she took position with the Confederacy, preferring to battle in defence of liberty, rather than, in opposition to all her principles, to invade or suffer the invasion of the South.

So far, therefore, from desiring to destroy the United States Government, the great object of those States which first seceded was to secure their own rights, and their tranquillity; while the immediate object of the States which last seceded was to place themselves as barriers in the way of a fanatical Administration, and, if possible, stay the bloody effort to coerce independent States to remain in the Union, when their constitutional rights would not be respected, and when the very purpose to coerce them showed a readiness to sacrifice the lives of citizens to the demands of sectional hostility. The South would never vote in favor of annexing or retaining a Northern State by force of arms. Instead, therefore, of waging war for the overthrow of the United States, the Confederate States simply defend themselves.

The war is forced upon us. We have always desired peace. After a conflict of opinions between the North and the South in Church and State, of more than thirty years, growing more bitter and painful daily, we withdrew from them to secure peace—they send troops to compel us into re-union! Our proposition was peaceable separation, saying, "We are actually divided, our nominal union is only a platform of strife." The answer is a call for seventy-five thousand troops, to force submission to a Government whose character, in the judgment of the South, had been sacrificed to sectionalism. From the speech of Mr. Burke, already referred to, the following language may be quoted as not inappropriate to our position in respect of peace,—

"THE PROPOSITION IS PEACE.—Not peace through the medium of war; not peace to be hunted through the labyrinth of intricate and endless negotiations; not peace to arise out of universal discord, fomented from principle, in all parts of the empire; not peace to depend on the judicial determination of perplexing questions, or the precise marking the shadowy boundaries of a complex government. It is simple peace, sought in the spirit of peace, and laid in principles purely pacific."

Such a proposition of peace was clearly the appropriate duty of a Christian people. The South can point out on the page of history the names, and refer to the earnest and repeated efforts of her commissioners of peace. But our foes preferred war—violence—and by violence the end they aimed at was unattainable, as the purpose was unworthy of a Christian nation. Against this violence, upon principle, and in the light of all the facts of the case, we, as the servants of God and the ministers of peace, testify and solemnly protest.

The second general point which we submit for your Christian consideration is,—

The separation of the Southern States is universally regarded by our people as final, and the formation of the Confederate States' Government as a fixed fact, promising in no respect, a restoration of the former Union.

Politically and ecclesiastically, the line has been drawn between North and South. It has been done distinctly, deliberately, finally, and in most solemn form. The Confederacy claims to possess all the conditions and essential characteristics of an independent Government. Our institutions, habits, tastes, pursuits, and religion, suggest no wish for reconstruction of the Union. We regard the Confederacy, in the wise providence of the Almighty, as the result of causes which render its independent existence a moral and political necessity, and its final and future independence of the United States not a matter that admits of the slightest doubt.

Among all the indefensible acts growing out of the inexcusable war waged against us, we will refer to one especially, in regard to which, for obvious reasons, we would speak, and as becometh us, plainly and earnestly:—The recent proclamation of the President of the United States, seeking the emancipation of the slaves of the South, is, in our judgment, a suitable occasion for solemn protest on the part of the people of God throughout the world.

First, upon the hypothesis that the proclamation could be carried out in its design, we have no language to describe the bloody tragedy that would appal humanity. Christian sensibilities recoil from the vision of a struggle that would inevitably lead to the slaughter of tens of thousands of poor deluded insurrectionists! Suppose their owners suffered; in the nature of things the slaves would suffer infinitely more. Make it absolutely necessary for the public safety that the slaves be slaughtered, and he who should write the history of that event would record the darkest chapter of human woe yet written.

But, secondly, suppose the proclamation—as indeed we esteem it in the South—a mere political document, devised to win favor among the most fanatical of the Northern people, uttering nothing that has not already been attempted, practically, but in vain, by the United States; suppose it to be worth no more than the paper upon which its bold iniquity is traced, nevertheless it is the avowal of a principle, the declaration of a wish, the deliberate attempt of the chief magistrate of a nation to do that which, as a measure of war, must be repugnant to civilisation, and which we calmly denounce as worthy of universal reprobation, and against which Christians in the name of humanity and religion ought to protest.

What shall sound Christianity say to that one-idea of philanthropy which, in the name of an imaginary good, in blind fury rushes upon a thousand unquestionable evils?

If it were the time for such argument, we should not fear the issue of a full discussion of this whole question of Slavery. We fear no investigation—we decline no debate; but we would not, at an hour like this, and in an address which is chiefly a protest, invoke the spirit of controversy. We content ourselves with what we regard as infinitely more solemn: we stand before the world, while war-screams the voices of disputants, and men in deadly contention wrestle on fields of blood, protesting against the crimes that in the name of liberty and philanthropy are attempted! Let it go forth from our lips while we live; let it be recorded of us when we are dead, that we—ministers of our Lord Jesus Christ, and members of His holy Church, with our hands upon the Bible, at once the sacred charter of our liberties and the foundation of our faith—call heaven and earth to record, that in the name of Him whose we are, and whom we serve, we protest! No description we can give of this measure of the Executive of the United States, even though indignation alone inspired us to utter it, would exaggerate what we regard as an unholy infatuation, a ruthless persecution, a cruel and shameful device, adding severity and bitterness to a wicked and reckless war.

When it is remembered that, in the name of a "military necessity" this new measure was adopted, we may pass by the concession of weakness implied in this fact, and content ourselves with calling attention to the immorality of a necessity created by a needless war of invasion. "Military necessity!" an excuse, not for self-defence—not for self-preservation—but for violating the laws of civilized warfare, and attempting a barbarity. If "military necessity" be the inspiration to attempt emancipation, how shall men praise it as philanthropy? Are other nations uninterested in such conduct? Proclaim the right first to invade and subjugate independent States, exhaust all resources, and then avow the principle of "military necessity" as an excuse for adding severity to the wrong, as a plea upon which to project a scheme violating every manly, honorable, and Christian sentiment! Suppose an invader happens to be too weak to conquer upon any other plan, has he therefore the right to proclaim that poison and the indiscriminate slaughter of women and children shall be his legal method? The common cause of humanity, and the common hopes of Christian civilization, as they appeal to every nation, cry out against this wretched subterfuge. If the "military necessity" of weakness may rightfully adopt any measure that an invader's ingenuity can invent or his malice suggest, what laws, what principles of justice and equity, shall nations at war respect?

At one time the world is told "the rebellion is weak, and will be crushed out in sixty days;" at another, "Union men abound in the South, and will welcome United States' troops as deliverers;" and now the invader is so hopeless of his task, that it is a "military necessity" that he obtain help of slaves! May it not be pertinently asked, what, that is creditable to this invasion, ought men to believe, and to what end is this deceitful war waged? When this last resort, like all the enemy's preceding schemes, shall signally fail, as it certainly will, to achieve the ruin of the South, what is promised? Nothing, but war! cruel, relentless, desperate war! Because the President by his scheme violates the constitution, we might condemn him; though the constitutionality of his acts be less important to us than to the people over whom he presides; because he has violated his word, his special promise, and even his solemn oath of office, we might abhor his act; though that is a matter which may chiefly concern his conscientiousness, and illustrate the character of that officer whom Southerners refuse to salute as their President; because of the diabolical mischief intended, we might in the name of Heaven indignantly denounce his Proclamation, though no weapon formed against us be, practically, more harmless. But these are not the considerations which move us to protest: we solemnly protest because, under the disguise of philanthropy, and the pretence of doing good, he would seek the approbation of mankind upon a war that promises to humanity only evil, and that continually.

Let philanthropists observe, even according to its own terms, this measure is in no proper sense an act of mercy to the slave, but of malice toward the master. It provides for freeing only the slaves of those who fight against the United States. The effort is not to relieve that Government of slavery, where the philanthropy has full opportunity for displaying its generosity, and the power to exercise it in respect to slavery, if it exists at all, can be indulged; but the effort is simply to involve slavery as an agent against the South, reckless of the consequences to the slaves themselves. Shall a pretext at once so weak and so base mislead intelligent men, and make them imagine Abraham Lincoln is a philanthropist? His position ought to be offensive to every sincere abolitionist, as well as disgusting to every sincere friend of the slave, of every shade of opinion on the question of slavery. How does it affect the cause of the Confederacy? If to awaken a deeper resentment than ever inflamed the people of the South before; if to quench the last sentiment of respect that lingered in their breasts for the United States' Government; if to unite them more resolutely than ever, and to make it to the individual interest of every person in the bounds of the Confederacy to sustain and strengthen it with every dollar and every arm, and every prayer, and every energy of manly virtue and Christian encouragement, be to advance the invader's interest, and give him hope of success, then has the proclamation furnished him opportunity of congratulating himself.

We submit further: That the war against the Confederate States has achieved no good result, and we find nothing in the present state of the struggle that gives promise of the United States accomplishing any good by its continuance. Though hundreds of thousands of lives have been lost, and many millions of treasure spent; though a vast amount of valuable property has been destroyed, and numbers of once happy homes made desolate; though cities and towns have been temporarily captured, and aged men and helpless women and children have suffered such things as it were even a shame to speak of plainly; though sanctuaries have been desecrated, and ministers of God been dragged from sacred altars to loathsome prisons; though slaves have been instigated to insurrection, and every measure has been adopted that the ingenuity of the enemy could devise, or his ample resources afford by sea and by land; yet we aver, without fear of contradiction, that the only possession which the United States hold in the Confederate States is the ground on which United States' troops pitch their tents; and that whenever those troops withdraw from a given locality in our territory, the people resident therein testify a warmer devotion to the Confederate cause than even before their soil was invaded. Nothing is therefore conquered—no part of the country is subdued; the civil jurisdiction of the United States, the real test of their success, has not been established by any force of arms. Where such civil jurisdiction exists at all along the border, it had existed all the while, was not obtained by force, and is not the fruit of conquest. The fact is admitted by our enemies themselves.

It is worthy of special notice, that, notwithstanding the gigantic exertions of the United States, they have not been able to secure the return of a single county, or section of a county, much less a single State, that has seceded. No civil order and peace spring up in the track of their armies. All in front of them is resolute resistance; and behind them, when they have entered our territory, is a deep, uncompromising opposition, over which only military force can for a moment be trusted. Thus the civilised world is called upon to observe an invasion which has lasted nearly two years, and achieved nothing but cruelty. Before it a people ready to die, but neither ready to submit, nor weak enough to be conquered; and for its gloomy prospect an interminable war, growing more bitter and unfeeling every day, because more hopeless to them than that by it have sought things impossible as well as unrighteous. In the name of the great Prince of Peace, has Christianity, has civilisation, nothing to say to such an awful tragedy? Such is the war for the Union! Yet every day our foes are deepening and widening that river of blood which divides us from them for ever!

The only change of opinion among our people since the beginning of the war, that is of material importance to the final issue, has been the change from all lingering attachment to the former Union, to a more sacred and reliable devotion to the Confederate Government. The sentiments of the people are not alterable in any other respects by force of arms. If the whole country were occupied by United States' troops, it would merely exhibit a military despotism, against which the people would struggle in perpetual revolutionary effort, while any Southerners remained alive. Extermination of the inhabitants could alone realise civil possession of their soil. Subjugation is, therefore, clearly impossible. Is extermination desired by Christians?

The moral and religious interests of the South ought to be appreciated by Christians of all nations.

These interests have realised certainly no benefit from the war. We are aware that, in respect to the moral aspects of the question of slavery, we differ from those who conceive of emancipation as a measure of benevolence, and on that account we suffer much reproach which we are conscious of not deserving. With all the facts of the system of slavery in its practical operations before us, "as eye-witnesses and ministers of the Word, having had perfect understanding of all things" on this subject of which we speak, we may surely claim respect for our opinions and statements. Most of us have grown up from childhood among the slaves; all of us have preached to and taught them the word of life; have administered to them the ordinances of the Christian Church; sincerely love them as souls for whom Christ died; we go among them freely, and know them in health and sickness, in labor and rest, from infancy to old age. We are familiar with their physical and moral condition, and alive to all their interests; and we testify in the sight of God, that the relation of master and slave among us, however we may deplore abuses in this, as in other relations of mankind, is not incompatible with our holy Christianity, and that the presence of the Africans of our land is an occasion of gratitude on their behalf before God; seeing that thereby Divine Providence has brought them where missionaries of the Cross may freely proclaim to them the word of salvation, and the work is not interrupted by agitating fanaticism. The South has done more than any people on earth for the Christianization of the African race. The condition of slaves here is not wretched, as northern fictions would have men believe, but prosperous and happy, and would have been yet more so but for the mistaken zeal of the Abolitionists. Can emancipation obtain for them a better portion? The practicable plan for benefiting the African race must be the Providential plan—the Scriptural plan. We adopt that plan in the South; and while the State should seek by wholesome legislation to regard the interests of master and slave, we, as ministers, would preach the word to both as we are commanded of God. This war has not benefited the slaves. Those who have been encouraged or compelled to leave their masters have gone, and we aver can go, to no state of society that offers them any better things than they have at home, either in respect to their temporal or eternal welfare. We regard Abolitionism as an interference with the plans of Divine Providence. It has not the signs of the Lord's blessing. It is a fanaticism which puts forth no good fruit; instead of blessing, it has brought forth cursing; instead of love, hatred; instead of life, death—bitterness, and sorrow, and pain; and infidelity and moral degeneracy follow its labors. We remember how the apostle has taught the minister of Jesus upon this subject: "Let as many servants as are under the yoke count their own masters worthy of all honor, that the name of God and His doctrine be not blasphemed. And they that have believing masters, let them not despise them because they are brethren; but rather do them service because they are faithful and beloved, partakers of the benefit. These things teach and exhort. If any man teach otherwise, and consent not to wholesome words, even the words of our Lord Jesus Christ, and to the doctrine which is according to godliness, he is proud, knowing nothing, but dotting about questions and strifes of words, whereof cometh envy, strife, railings, evil surmises, perverse disputings of men of corrupt mind, and destitute of the truth, supposing that gain is godliness: from such withdraw thyself."

This is what we teach, and obedient to the last verse of the text, from men that "teach otherwise"—hoping for peace—we "withdraw" ourselves.

The Christians of the South, we claim, are pious, intelligent, and liberal. Their pastoral and missionary works have points of peculiar interest. There are hundreds of thousands here, both white and colored, who are not strangers to the blood that bought them. We rejoice that the great Head of the Church has not despised us. We desire as much as in us lieth to live peaceably with all men, and though reviled, to revile not again.

Much harm has been done to the religious enterprises of the Church by the war; we will not tire you by enumerating particulars. We thank God for the patient faith and fortitude of our people during these days of trial.

Our soldiers were before the war our fellow-citizens, and many of them are of the household of faith, who have carried to the camp so much of the heaven of Christianity, that, amid all the demoralizing influences of army life, the good work of salvation has gone forward there.

Our President, some of our most influential statesmen, our commanding general, and an unusual proportion of the principal generals, as well as scores of other officers, are prominent, and we believe consistent members of the Church. Thousands of our soldiers are men of prayer. We regard our success in the war as due to Divine mercy, and our Government and people have recognized the hand of God in the formal and humble celebration of His goodness. We have no fear in regard to the future. If the war continue for years, we believe God's grace sufficient for us.

In conclusion, we ask for ourselves, our churches, our country, the devout prayers of all God's people,—“the will of the Lord be done!”

Christian brethren, think of these things; and let your answer to our address be the voice of an enlightened Christian sentiment going forth from you against war, against persecution for conscience' sake, against the ravaging of the Church of God by fanatical invasion. But if we speak to you in vain, nevertheless we have not spoken in vain in the sight of God; for we have proclaimed the truth—we have testified in behalf of Christian civilization—we have invoked charity—we have filed our solemn protest against a cruel and useless war. And our children shall read it, and honor our spirit, though in much feebleness we may have borne our testimony.

“Charity beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things.” We desire to “follow after charity;” and “as many as walk according to this rule, peace be on them, and mercy, and upon the Israel of God.”

NOTES.

1. In publishing the foregoing Address, it is proper to declare explicitly, that its origin was from no political source whatever, but from a conference of ministers of the Gospel in the city of Richmond.

The signatures are confined to this class because it was believed that, on the points presented, the testimony of men holding this office might be received with less prejudice than that of any other. These signatures might have been indefinitely increased. Only a limited number of names—much less than at first intended—was solicited; and as they are still coming in, some will probably be received too late for insertion. Those appended represent more or less fully every accessible section of the Confederacy, and nearly every denomination of Christians. They are ample for the chief objects intended; namely, to bear witness to the Christian world that the representations here made concerning the public sentiment of the South are true, and to carry a solemn protest against the continuance of this fruitless and unrighteous war.

2. From the best sources of information it is ascertained that the whole number of communicants in the Christian churches in the Confederate States is about two millions and fifty thousand.

Of these the number of white communicants is about one million five hundred and fifty thousand. Supposing the total white population to be eight millions, and one-half that number to be over eighteen years of age, a little more than one-third of the adult population are members of the Church of Christ.

The number of colored communicants is about five hundred thousand. Assuming the colored population to be four millions, there would be, upon the same method of computation, one-fourth of the adult population in communion with the Church of Christ. Thus has God blessed us in gathering into His Church from the children of Africa more than twice as many as are reported from all the converts in the Protestant Missions throughout the heathen world.

In making this summary of facts, I have omitted mention of Sermons, Addresses, and Letters from Bishops and other clergymen, as chiefly of personal interest, and not indicative of organized Church action.

ORDERS OF THE SECRETARY OF WAR.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

November 30, 1863—The following order in relation to the use of all houses of worship belonging to the Methodist Episcopal Church South was issued and delivered to Bishop Ames.

December 9, 1863—The same order was given concerning houses of worship of the same denomination in the Department of Virginia and North Carolina, and delivered to Bishop O. C. Baker, and those in the Department of the South, and delivered to Bishop Edmund S. Janes.

December 30, 1863—The same order was given concerning houses of worship of the same denomination in the States of Kentucky and Tennessee, and delivered to Bishop M. Simps n.

WAR DEPARTMENT, ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE, WASHINGTON, November 30, 1863.

To the Generals commanding the Departments of the Missouri, the Tennessee, and the Gulf, and all Generals and officers commanding armies, detachments, and posts, and all officers in the service of the United States in the above mentioned Departments:

You are hereby directed to place at the disposal of Rev. Bishop Ames all houses of worship belonging to the Methodist Episcopal Church South in which a loyal minister, who has been appointed by a loyal Bishop of said church, does not now officiate.

It is a matter of great importance to the Government, in its efforts to restore tranquility to the community and peace to the nation, that Christian ministers should, by example and precept, support and foster the loyal sentiment of the people.

Bishop Ames enjoys the entire confidence of this Department, and no doubt is entertained that all ministers who may be appointed by him will be entirely loyal. You are expected to give him all the aid, countenance, and support practicable in the execution of his important mission.

You are also authorized and directed to furnish Bishop Ames and his clerk with transportation and subsistence when it can be done without prejudice to the service, and will afford them courtesy, assistance and protection.

By order of the Secretary of War:

B. D. TOWNSEND,
Assistant Adjutant General.

AMERICAN BAPTIST HOME MISSION SOCIETY.

WAR DEPARTMENT, ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE, WASHINGTON, January 14, 1864.

To the Generals commanding the Military Division of the Mississippi, and the Departments of the Gulf, of the South, and of Virginia and North Carolina, and all Generals and officers commanding armies, detachments, and posts, and all officers in the service of the United States in the above mentioned departments:

You are hereby directed to place at the disposal of the American Baptist Home Mission Society all houses of worship belonging to the Baptist Church South in which a loyal minister of said church does not now officiate. It is a matter of great importance to the Government in its efforts to restore tranquility to the community, and peace to the nation, that Christian ministers should by example and precept support and foster the loyal sentiment of the people. The American Baptist Home Mission Society enjoys the entire confidence of this Department, and no doubt is entertained that all ministers who may be appointed by it will be entirely loyal. You are expected to give it all the aid, countenance, and support practicable in the execution of its important mission.

You are also authorized and directed to furnish their executive officer or agent and his clerk with transportation and subsistence when it can be done without prejudice to the service, and will afford them courtesy, assistance and protection.

By order of the Secretary of War:

B. D. TOWNSEND,
Assistant Adjutant General.

UNITED PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

WAR DEPARTMENT, ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE, WASHINGTON, February 15, 1864.

To all Generals and officers commanding armies, detachments, and posts, and all officers in the service of the United States, in the States of Mississippi, Arkansas, Tennessee, Alabama, Georgia, Florida, and South and North Carolina:

You are hereby directed to place at the disposal of the authorized Agent of the "Board of Home Missions of the United Presbyterian Church" all houses of worship belonging to the Associate Reformed Presbyterian Church, in which a loyal minister who has been appointed by the Board of Home Missions of said church does not now officiate. It is a matter of great importance to the Government in its efforts to restore tranquility to the community, and peace to the nation, that Christian ministers should, by example and precept support and foster the loyal sentiment of the people. The Board of Home Missions of the United Presbyterian Church enjoys the entire confidence of this Department, and no doubt is entertained that all ministers who may be appointed by it will be entirely loyal. You are expected to give it all the aid, countenance, and support practicable in the execution of its important mission.

This authority is designed to apply only to such States as are by the President's Proclamation designated as being in rebellion, and is not designed to operate in loyal States, nor in cases where loyal congregations in rebel States shall be organized and worship upon the terms prescribed by the President's Amnesty.

You are also authorized and directed to furnish the authorized Agent of the Board of Home Missions of the United Presbyterian Church, and his clerk, with transportation and subsistence when it can be done without prejudice to the service, and will afford them courtesy, assistance, and protection.

By order of the Secretary of War:

E. D. TOWNSEND,
Assistant Adjutant General.

PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH, (O. S. AND N. S.)

WAR DEPARTMENT, ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE,
WASHINGTON, March 10, 1864.

To the Generals commanding the Military Division of the Mississippi, and the Department of the Gulf, of the South, and of Virginia and North Carolina, and all generals and officers commanding armies, detachments, and posts, and all officers in the service of the United States, in the above mentioned Departments:

The Board of Domestic Missions of the Presbyterian Church and the Presbyterian Committee of Home Missions enjoy the entire confidence of this Department, and no doubt is entertained that all ministers who may be appointed by them will be entirely loyal.

You are expected to permit such ministers of the Gospel bearing a commission of the "Board of Domestic Missions" or of the "Presbyterian Committee of Home Missions" of the Presbyterian Church, as may convince you that their commissions are genuine, to exercise the functions of their office within your command, and to give them all the aid, countenance, and support which may be practicable and in your judgment proper in the execution of their important mission.

By order of the Secretary of War:

E. D. TOWNSEND,
Assistant Adjutant General.

The above order was given at the solicitation of the Rev. Dr. Janeway, Mission Rooms, 910 Arch street, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, and of Rev. Dr. Kendall, Presbyterian Rooms, 150 Nassau street, New York City, and copies sent to each of the commanding officers of the Military Division of the Mississippi, and the Departments of the Gulf, of the South, and of Virginia and North Carolina.*

* The Presbytery of Louisville, O. S., at a late meeting, passed a series of resolutions, proposed by Dr. S. R. Wilson, in which the Presbytery enters a solemn protest against the action of the Board of Domestic Missions, in procuring an order from the Secretary of War, permitting ministers of the gospel bearing a commission from the Board, to exercise their ministry within the military departments in the Southern States. The Presbytery further calls upon the General Assembly "at once to disavow the said act, that so the Church may be saved from the sin, reproach, and ruin which this thing is calculated to bring upon her."

The following is the dissent of one of the members of the Presbytery:

The undersigned respectfully dissents from the action of Presbytery:

First—Because our commission is into all the world, and unto every creature; and there are some of them that we know not how to reach without a pass.

Secondly—Because the framers of our Confession of Faith, both by word and by deed, recognized the powers that be as "nursing fathers," bound "to protect the Church of our common Lord;" and we think it no disgrace, according to our ordination vows, still to adhere to this doctrine of our fathers.

Thirdly—Because the Apostle Paul asked leave to preach the gospel on various occasions, both of the civil and military authorities; and we are by no means convinced UNITED BRETHREN IN CHRIST.

WAR DEPARTMENT, ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE,
WASHINGTON, March 23, 1864.

To the Generals commanding the Military Division of the Mississippi, the Departments of the Gulf, of the South, and of Virginia and North Carolina, and all Generals and officers commanding armies, detachments, and posts, and all officers in the service of the United States in the above mentioned Departments:

You are hereby directed to give to Teachers and Missionaries sent out by the "Church of the United Brethren in Christ," such privileges and facilities for their work within the limits of your command, as are usually given to others under similar circumstances and are not prejudicial to the service.

By order of the Secretary of War:

E. D. TOWNSEND,
Assistant Adjutant General.

The above was delivered to Rev. D. K. Flickinger, of Dayton, Ohio.

EXPLANATORY ORDER.*

WAR DEPARTMENT, ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE,
WASHINGTON, February 13, 1864.

MAJOR-GENERAL ROSECRANS, U. S. Volunteers,

Comdg. Department of the Missouri, St. Louis, Mo.:

SIR: I am directed by the Secretary of War to say that the orders from the Department placing at the disposal of the constituted Church authorities in the Northern States houses of worship in other States, is designed to apply only to such States as are by the President's Proclamation designated as being in rebellion and is not designed to operate in loyal States, nor in cases where loyal congregations in rebel States shall be organized and worship upon the terms prescribed by the President's Amnesty.

I am, Sir, very respectfully,

Your obedient servant,

E. D. TOWNSEND,
Assistant Adjutant General.

A copy of the above was sent to Bishop Ames.

ENFORCEMENT OF THESE ORDERS.

In pursuance of the above orders, Brigadier General Veatch issued this order at Memphis:

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF MEMPHIS,
December 23, 1863.

Rev. Bishop AMES: In obedience to the orders of the that he was guilty of "illicit alliances," of "spiritual whoredom," or that he was "demoralized" thereby.

Fourthly—Because that same great Apostle to the Gentiles rejoiced that the gospel was preached, even through envy and strife; and we have no infallible evidence that he went contrary, either to "the word of God," or to the "testimony of" any of "the fathers," except certain of the "sons of Issachar," who have recently risen up in the Presbytery of Louisville, "to tell the people what to do."

Fifthly—Because the General Assembly of "the Church in the wilderness" asked leave of the Ammonites to pass through their borders while journeying on ecclesiastical business; and we have never heard of any Presbytery protesting against their action as unconstitutional; nor have we ever heard of any individuals calling such right in question, except Pharaoh and Sihon—both of them hardened monarchs—who did it to their own destruction; and the Presbytery of Louisville, "all honorable men," who, we fear, have done it to their own injury.

By dissenting only from this action of Presbytery, the undersigned does not wish to be understood, by any means, as endorsing every thing else that is now, or may hereafter become wrong in this wicked world of ours.

JAMES P. McMILLAN.

* This explanatory order was issued on the application of Loyal Methodists of Missouri, for whom Rev. John Hogan acted in bringing it to the attention of the President. This note to Mr. Hogan illustrates the President's views:

"As you see within, the Secretary modifies his order so as to exempt Missouri from it. Kentucky never was within it; nor, as I learn from the Secretary, was it ever intended for any more than a means of rallying the Methodist people in favor of the Union, in localities where the rebellion had disorganized and scattered them. Even in that view, I fear it is liable to some abuses, but it is not quite easy to withdraw it entirely and at once."

A. LINCOLN.

"February 13, 1864"

Secretary of War, dated Washington, November 30th, 1863, a copy of which is here attached, I place at your disposal a "house of worship" known as "Wesley Chapel," in the city of Memphis, State of Tennessee, the said house being claimed as the property of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and there being no loyal minister, appointed by a loyal Bishop, now officiating in said house of worship.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant.

JAMES C. VEATCH,
Brigadier General.

1864, March 23—Rev. J. P. Newman, D. D., Methodist Episcopal, delivered an address in New Orleans on an occasion "described in the subjoined report from the True Delta, of March 28:

REV. DR. NEWMAN'S ADDRESS IN NEW ORLEANS.

[From the True Delta, March 28.]

In accordance with the Government plan concerning the churches of the South, the Board of Missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church have sent the Rev. J. P. Newman, D. D., to New Orleans, to take charge of all the churches of that powerful denomination there. A very large audience, composed of some of the most influential citizens, assembled on the evening of the 23^d inst., at the Carondelet street Church, to extend to the reverend gentleman a cordial welcome.

On being introduced by the chairman, Dr. Newman said:

There were three reasons for sending a minister from New York to New Orleans:

1. It was in harmony with the theory of labor as held by the Methodist Church. There is no such Church as the Methodist Church North. Ours is the Methodist Episcopal Church. We are not sectional. We acknowledge no geographical limits less than the world itself. Every minister of our church may say with its founder, "The world is my parish and Heaven is my home." [Applause.] In the separation of 1844 our church relinquished no right to labor in the South, but since has claimed, as before, and still claims, to send her ministers to the equator and to the poles, and all latitudes between. We reject the sentiment that we are encroaching upon the rights of others. If the theory that we are sectional be true, what right have we to send ministers to Europe, to Scandinavia, Bulgaria and Constantinople? This movement, then, is in strict harmony with our system of labor.

2. It is required by the present state of the country. Thousands of our citizens have followed in the track of our victorious armies, "to build the old wastes, and raise up the former desolations and repair the waste cities," and the church had been recreant to her trust had she not provided them with the ministry of the Word. We have too long trusted our Northern men who have taken up their residence South to the exclusive influence of Southern teaching; but that day is past, and the Church now declares that she will not trust these thousands of her sons and daughters to—(the words of the speaker were here lost in a storm of applause.) Whatever mountains they may climb, into whatever valleys they may descend, on whatever plains they may spread themselves, or whatever seas they may cross, she claims the right to follow them with her ministers of truth and peace. [Applause.]

3. This movement was justified by the present disorganized and destitute condition of the Southern churches. Their former ministers had either fled or been silenced, or imprisoned, or banished, and it had become the solemn duty of the Mother Church to send shepherds to these deserted and scattered flocks. A shepherd should never leave his flock though all of Uncle Sam's guns were turned against him. [Applause.]

Toward these, her children, has the Mother Church been "moved with compassion," seeing that they are as "sweep without a shepherd," and by her direction I came as a minister of Christ to supply the consolation of religion to her members. While I have much respect for balls and bayonets, my great hope for the salvation of the country is the Gospel. I expect to mingle with you in your prayer meetings, and by all ministerial and pastoral fidelity shall try to hold up the Cross, to preach a gospel which is "the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth."

These are the reasons which influenced the Missionary Board to recommend to the Bishops to make this provision for the spiritual wants of this section of our country.

But we find ourselves met on the threshold of two embarrassments, of which I have heard since my arrival in New Orleans:

1. The question of property confronts us. We are denounced as church robbers; are charged with having robbed the people of the South of their church property.

My answer is: The right of church property has never been disturbed, as far as we are concerned.

The General Government has seen fit to seize these churches, but it has not conveyed their title to us. There has been no passing of deeds. We do not own an inch either of this or any other church in the South. The Secretary of War wrote to the General commanding this Department to place at the disposal of Bishop Ames the Methodist churches for the use of the loyal ministers. If there has been any robbery the accusation lies against the General Government. But the General Government has committed no robbery. It was aware that these churches were occupied (so far as they were occupied at all) by congregations united by disloyal sympathies and by teachers disposed to inculcate treason. It knew that if they were placed under the care of the Methodist Church they would be occupied by no ministers but would be loyal to the Government, and that they would be likely to gather around them loyal hearers. [Applause.] So much then for property. He did not want to hear another word about the robbery of church property while he was in New Orleans.

2. Another embarrassment is the charge that the Methodist Church is a political church, and, therefore, should not be tolerated in the South.

Let us analyze this charge. Does it mean that it is united to the State like the Church of England? Have we not recently heard the disclaimer of our President, that he does not "run the churches?"

Does it mean that it is a political party? that its ministers are stump orators? that its class meetings, prayer meetings, quarterly meetings, its annual and general conferences are so much political machinery, worked for political or partisan ends? It will not be pretended. Does it mean that our church is loyal to the General Government? If this be the meaning, I shall admit the charge. We hold and teach that loyalty is a religious duty, as truly obligatory as prayer itself. The twenty-third article of the Discipline is equally binding on the clergy and the laity, and constitutes us a confessedly loyal church. Nor is it optional with the minister whether he inculcates loyal sentiments or not, for how shall a man be saved unless he be loyal?

Does it mean that we are opposed to the doctrine of State sovereignty, Secession and Rebellion? I accept the definition. From the sabbath-school scholar to the minister, from the exhorter to the bishop, our whole membership repudiate these doctrines.

Does it mean that our ministers denounce political corruptions? I accept the definition. If in this we go astray, we go astray with Moses, who confronted the greatest slaveholder that ever lived; with Paul, who reasoned before Felix "of righteousness, temperance, and judgment to come;" with John the Baptist, who said to Herod Antipas, "it is not lawful for thee to have thy brother Philip's wife;" with Luther, who attacked with the sword of truth the political abominations of Popery.

I have reprieved sin in New York, and, God helping me, I shall reprove it in your Crescent city. I hate cowardice, and approve the outspoken truthfulness of the ministers of the North; and on fidelity to the truth depends the salvation of our country. It is a truth verified by all history, as is the Church so is the State. With no war has the Church been more identified than with the present. With this war no Church has been more identified than the Methodist Church, both North and South.

The Methodist Church South has given no reluctant adhesion to the rebellion; has, perhaps, been foremost, inter pares primo, in the mad race of disunion.

The Methodist Church has not been less unanimous and zealous in the defence of the Union. Her bishops, her ministers and her laity have nobly responded to the call of their country in this the hour of her peril. The voice of Simpson has been heard pleading eloquently for the unity of his country. Ames, as patriotic as wise, has not hesitated to lend his aid to our unfortunate prisoners in Richmond, and to give his sons to the army. James has found no narrow field for his philanthropic heart in the labors of the Christian Commission. All our church papers and periodicals have given an uncompromising, zealous, persistent support to the Government, and have thrown the whole weight of their influence, intelligent as it was potent, on the side of the Union.

The speaker was glad that he was able to present these views and statements before an audience so large, intelligent and thoughtful. And now, in conclusion, what was the object he had in view?

The Board of Missions, which had been considered a conservative body, (a body of business men in a small room in the city of New York) had requested that an appropriation should be made for the benefit of this work in the South, and that it should be applied without distinction of color.

Much had been said about equality. But he believed that all men were equal in religious privileges, and ought to be equal in law; and he admonished his audience that if the Caucasian should reject the Gospel and refuse to fill the churches, (casting his eyes toward the galleries, which were filled with faces of a darker hue,) we turn to the sons of Africa. [Applause.]

THE CHURCH QUESTION IN BALTIMORE.

THIRD SESSION, THIRTY-SEVENTH CONGRESS.

1863, March 3—Mr. May, of Maryland, moved that the rules be suspended, to enable him to submit the following:

Whereas, It is represented that Major General Schenck, commanding the forces of the United States stationed in Baltimore, Maryland, has ordered, as a condition to be annexed to the worship of Almighty God by certain religious societies or congregations of the Methodist Church of that city, that the flag of the United States shall be conspicuously displayed at the time and place of such worship; and

Whereas, The said order is a plain violation of the inalienable right to worship God according to the dictates of every one's conscience, as it is asserted by the said congregations, and also by our declarations of fundamental rights, and secured by our State and Federal Constitutions; and

Whereas, A minister of the said congregation, the reverend John H. Dashiell, having, on Sunday, the 15th ultimo, removed the said flag from his own premises, which was also the place of worship of one of said congregations, where the said flag had been placed surreptitiously by some evil-minded person, and for so doing was arrested by order of the said General Schenck, and held as a prisoner: Therefore

Resolved, That the Judiciary Committee be, and hereby is, instructed to inquire into the allegations aforesaid, and ascertain by what authority the said General Schenck exercises a power to regulate or interfere with the privileges of divine worship, and also to arrest and detain as a prisoner the said minister of the Gospel, as aforesaid; and further, that the said Committee be instructed to report upon the same at an early day.

Consent was not obtained, the subject being undetermined when the Speaker adjourned the House sine die.

The facts in the case were as follow:

FIRST ORDER OF GENERAL SCHENCK.

HEADQUARTERS MIDDLE DEPARTMENT, 8TH ARMY CORPS,
OFFICE PROVOST MARSHAL,
BALTIMORE, Feb. 9, 1863.

JOHN MCGEOCH, Esq., Gen'l Sup'd't Assembly Rooms,
Cor. Hanover and Lombard St.:

SIR—I understand that considerable disgust is excited in the mind of a class of persons who assemble at your Rooms, in consequence of the American Flag having been displayed there.

You will hereafter cause constantly to be displayed in a conspicuous position at the head of the hall a large size American Flag until further orders.

By order Major General Schenck:

WM. S. FISH,
Major and Provost Marshal.

SECOND ORDER OF GENERAL SCHENCK.

HEADQUARTERS MIDDLE DEPARTMENT, 8TH ARMY CORPS,
OFFICE PROVOST MARSHAL,
BALTIMORE, Feb. 14, 1863.

JOHN M. BUCK, Franklin Bank, R. H. MILES, H. W. BROUGH, and others, Trusters Central Methodist Church:

GENTLEMEN—I understand that rather than to worship God under the shadow of the American Flag you have in consequence of the order for you to display in the building in which you hold your services, our glorious flag, concluded not to hold such worship at the place you have been accustomed to have it and have chosen some other place for no other purpose than evading this order. Therefore you will under these circumstances cause to be conspicuously displayed in the public building or buildings where you meet to-morrow (the 15th) the American Flag, as in accordance with first order to Mr. McGeoch. I understand the congregation of which you are the trustees are to meet in different places. The regulation mentioned above will have reference to each place.

By order Major General Schenck:

WM. S. FISH,
Major and Provost Marshal.

BALTIMORE, 14th February, 1863.

Major General SCHENCK:

GENERAL—A communication (without date) from the Provost Marshal, by your order, addressed to myself and others, as trustees of Central Methodist Church, was handed me at a late hour to-day.

Some of the other gentlemen named being absent from the city, I have deemed it my duty to reply individually. The communication referred to sets forth that "I understand that rather than to worship God under the shadow of the American flag you have in consequence of the order for you to display in the building in which you hold your services, our glorious flag, concluded not to hold such worship at the place you have been accustomed to have it, and have chosen some other place, for the no other purpose than evading this order. Therefore you will under these circumstances, cause to be conspicuously displayed in the public building or buildings, where you meet to-morrow (the 15th) the American flag as in accordance with first order to Mr. McGeoch. I understand the congregation of which you are the trustees are to meet in two different places. The regulation mentioned above will have reference to each place."

I beg to assure you, general, that from whatever source you may have derived your information, it is erroneous. The congregation worshipping at the Assembly Rooms have been doing so for nearly one year, and it may truthfully be said, a more respectable and well ordered congregation has nowhere assembled. Discarding all political associations, we have not only sought, but insisted, that we would only have the gospel preached unto us. With great profit and religious comfort, we have thus conducted our exercises for all the time retired to, and not one unpleasant circumstance, so far as we know, has ever occurred to interrupt such harmony. On last Sabbath, (8th) when the congregation assembled as usual, for the morning service, it was found that two large American flags were displayed immediately over and in rear of the preacher's stand. Of course so unusual an exhibition seemed strange, and may have been objected to by a few, but the voluntary explanations made by Mr. McGeoch, in effect, that the lateness of the hour at which the room was vacated on Saturday night, prevented him from arranging it as he had always heretofore done, was satisfactory; and especially so to the great body of the members. The congregation in the morning was very large; indeed, the room was crowded, and nothing was either said or done, so far, certainly, as the members were concerned, calculated to give offence, or in the smallest degree wound the feelings of the most sensitive—no indignity whatever, by look, or word, or gesture, was offered to the American flag.

The congregation at night was about the usual average night assembly. A few days thereafter the official members learned with deep regret, and no little surprise, that the agent (Mr. McGeoch) had received orders from you, that the American flag should always be displayed, as on last Sabbath, and as it was impossible for the official members to put any other construction upon such order than a denial to them of the right to worship God according to the dictates of their own consciences, and as such order was unusual, different from what they had all their lives been accustomed to, and not made applicable to other religious assemblies in this city, they felt impelled to vacate the Assembly Rooms.

Not, as you suppose, general, that they would not "worship God under the shadow of the American flag;" for this a very large congregation, including most of our members, had done on the previous Sabbath. But upon the ground, and for the reason, that they were denied the right to worship God, without the display of such ensign.

The undersigned begs to be pardoned for saying to so distinguished and so intelligent a gentleman as General Schenck, that the inalienable right to worship God, according to the dictates of every man's conscience, however much it may have been interfered with in other countries, has ever been accorded to all men in this land of liberty, as indeed it might well be to all the inhabitants living "under the best government the world ever saw."

Sosacred has this right been esteemed that nearly, if not all the States of North America, have thrown around it the protection of legislative enactments; and for the maintenance of this great principle men have, in all ages, been willing "to count not only their own lives dear unto them"—have "taken joyfully the spoiling of their goods."

The difficulty, therefore, general, is not in the display of the American flag, abstractly considered, but it is as to whether this great principle of the free worship of God shall be surrendered.

Intimately associated with the congregation at the Assembly Rooms, we have two other appointments—one in Bidle street the other at Chatsworth. The latter has been a Mission school and place of worship for two years, and is the private property of Charles J. Baker, merchant of this city. The former is the private property of the Rev. John Dashiell, who occupies it for the instruction of youth during the week, and our association pays him rent for its use on the Sabbath and for week-night preaching. We have used it now for nearly one year. General Schenck, therefore, cannot fail to perceive that we have not, as the communication from the Provost Marshal states, "chosen some other place, for the no other purpose than evading this order"—meaning of course the order to display the flag at the Assembly Rooms.

At both of these appointments, large and highly respectable congregations assemble every Sabbath to hear the Gospel, a flourishing Sabbath school is also attached to each, and lately, under the influence of the Gracious Spirit, many have been added to the Church.

The undersigned, therefore, in view of all the circumstances, and with all that respect, which the position of such a distinguished gentleman as General Schenck should ever command, begs leave to say that he (the undersigned) has neither the right nor the inclination to order the American flag or any other ensign to be displayed at either of the places referred to.

With very great respect,

JOHN M. BUCK,
Recording Steward.

CARD OF MR. DASHIELL.

"To prevent misrepresentation, it is deemed best to explain an incident that may be erroneously reported in the morning papers.

"Yesterday morning a small American flag was found nailed over the door of my school-building, 155 Biddle street, the large hall of which is rented for religious worship. I did not know by what hands or at what hour it had been done. Lest it should, by the oddness of the thing, attract around the door a crowd, and produce a difficulty, and because it was not done by constituted authority, but surreptitiously in the night, and furthermore, because it was my will, as the owner of the property, that no display of the kind should be made upon it, I removed it. Who put it there, and what were the motives or where was the policeman when it was done, I shall not now inquire.

ACTION OF THE OFFICIAL MEMBERS.

At an adjourned meeting of the official members of the several congregations worshipping at Chatsworth, Biddle street, and formerly at the New Assembly Rooms, held on Tuesday evening, February 17th, the following preamble and resolutions were unanimously adopted:—

Whereas, the inalienable right to worship God according to the dictates of every man's conscience has ever been accorded to all the inhabitants of this country, and is so sacred a privilege as not to be lightly esteemed or easily set aside, and has been guaranteed by the legislative action of nearly, if not quite all the States of this nation; and whereas, the congregation lately worshipping at the New Assembly Rooms have enjoyed this inestimable privilege, at said place, for nearly one year, with great religious comfort and edification, and free from any interruption whatever; and whereas, an order has now issued from Major-General Schenck, military commander of this district, directing the American flag to be constantly displayed in a conspicuous place in said building, and which in effect prohibits our worship without the display of such ensign; and whereas, such order is unusual, and not made applicable to other religious congregations of this city; and whereas, no other construction can be placed upon such order than a direct interference with the great principle of the free and untrammelled worship of Almighty God; therefore,

Resolved, That we respectfully but earnestly protest against the right of Major-General Schenck, or any other military or civil officer, to interfere with or interrupt us in our sacred and solemn duty of worshipping God.

Resolved, That by reason of such order and interference we decline any longer to occupy the New Assembly Rooms.

Resolved, That these proceedings be signed by the chairman and secretary, and published in the city papers.

JOHN M. BUCK, Chairman.
WILLIAM R. BARRY, Secretary.

ARREST AND RELEASE OF MR. DASHIELL.

Mr. Dashiell was arrested, but released on signing a parole, stated below:

HEADQUARTERS MIDDLE DEPARTMENT, 8TH ARMY CORPS,
OFFICE PROVOST MARSHAL,
BALTIMORE, February 17, 1863.

REV. JOHN H. DASHIELL:

DEAR SIR—I enclose another parole, which I sincerely hope you cannot take exceptions to sign; and indeed I cannot conceive how any citizen, or reasonable man, as I have abundant evidence you are, can hesitate to put his name to such a paper, no matter how ultra his private sentiments or views may be—which, as I assured you before, is none of my business. You said to me on Monday morning that you thought it would have been better for you first to have ascertained whether the flag in question was placed in your building by authority or not before taking the measures you did. And as to the remainder of the parole (or the parole proper), I think your feelings are exactly in consonance with what I ask you to give your parole to do. If you conclude to sign the accompanying parole, please do so, and send immediately back, and I will endeavor to procure your return to your family this evening.

I am, very respectfully,

Your most obedient,

WM. S. FISH,
Major and Provost Marshal.

HEADQUARTERS MIDDLE DEPARTMENT, 8TH ARMY CORPS,
OFFICE PROVOST MARSHAL,
BALTIMORE, February 17, 1863.

I, John H. Dashiell, frankly admit that it was my duty to have first inquired, or endeavored to learn from some reliable source, whether the national flag which was displayed at the window of the building in Biddle street, from which I took it on Sunday last, was placed there by authority, before I proceeded to take it down on my own responsibility; and I hereby give my parole of honor that I will in every respect demean myself as a true, loyal, law-abiding citizen of the United States should, neither doing myself, or aiding, abetting, or countenancing any act of others that is prejudicial to the good of my country, or the honor of its flag.

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN GOVERNOR BRADFORD AND THE STEWARDS OF THE CHURCH.

HEADQUARTERS MIDDLE DEPARTMENT,
EIGHTH ARMY CORPS,
BALTIMORE, Md., March 28, 1863.

His Excellency A. W. BRADFORD,
Governor of Maryland:

DEAR SIR—Certain parties here who took offence at the sight of the United States flag in their place of worship have, I understand, addressed a letter to you complaining of the orders issued from these headquarters in relation thereto.

One of these parties addressed to me, and afterwards published in the newspapers, a communication on the subject, which I did not deem it necessary in any way to answer.

But if not incompatible with the public interest I shall be glad to have you furnish me with a copy of your correspondence on the subject, with leave to make it public, as I think there might be corrected thereby some mistaken views and opinions of my action in the matter.

I am, very respectfully,

Your obedient servant,

ROBT. C. SCHENCK,
Major General Commanding.

STATE OF MARYLAND,
EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
ANNAPOLIS, April 1, 1863.

Major General R. C. SCHENCK,
Commanding Middle Department:

DEAR SIR—I have received yours of 25th ultimo, in which, referring to a correspondence lately had between some gentlemen of Baltimore and myself, on the subject of your order directing the display of the United States flag in their place of worship, you request me to furnish you a copy of that correspondence, and to allow you to make it public, if not incompatible with the public interest.

The correspondence referred to took place some weeks since, and involving as it does an imputation upon your official conduct in this military department, you would seem to be entitled to a copy of it, as you request. I accordingly inclose it, and as the subject has been already repeatedly referred to through the press, can see no objection to its publication, especially if, as you suggest, it may be at all calculated to correct any mistaken views that may exist in reference to your course.

Very respectfully,

Your obedient servant,

A. W. BRADFORD.

LETTER OF TRUSTEES TO THE GOVERNOR.

BALTIMORE, March 3, 1863.

To His Excellency A. W. BRADFORD,

Governor of Maryland:

SIR—The undersigned, Stewards of the Central, Chatsworth, and Biddle Street Methodist Episcopal Churches in this city, having, by an extraordinary order from Major General Schenck, Military Commander for this district, been deprived of the right and privilege of holding public worship, except upon conditions prescribed by military authority, feel constrained to make application to your Excellency for that relief and protection which is guaranteed to them by the Constitution and laws of Maryland, and which we are well persuaded is entirely within the power of your Excellency to afford.

In bringing to the notice of your Excellency a statement of our grievances, we beg your indulgence for the reference we shall make to the commencement of our organization, it seeming to us to be essential in order to a correct understanding of the whole subject. The General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church which met at Buffalo, New York, in May, 1860, changed the Discipline of our Church, and unconstitutionally introduced a new dogma, or chapter, into the Discipline, very objectionable to a number of the Annual Conferences, and especially so to the Baltimore Conference; by reason of which a majority of the ministers and laymen determined that they would no longer hold affiliation with, or be subject to the jurisdiction of said General Conference.

In furtherance of this a Laymen's Convention, numerous attended by delegates from the various stations and circuits within the bounds of the Baltimore and East Baltimore Conferences, was held in the Eutaw Methodist Episcopal Church, in this city, in December, 1860. The Hon. J. Summerfield Berry was Chairman, and the Convention adopted resolutions declaring they would not submit to the new chapter, and in effect ignoring the jurisdiction of the Buffalo General Conference.

Another Laymen's Convention, convened under a call from the Presiding Elders and Lay Stewards, met at Staunton, Virginia, in March, 1861, (at the same time as the Baltimore Annual Conference,) and reaffirmed the position which had been taken at the Baltimore Eutaw Convention the preceding December, the most prominent supporters at this second Convention being Hon. J. Summerfield Berry and the Hon. Hugh L. Bond.

The Baltimore Conference, then in session at Staunton, received and acted upon the memorial from the Laymen's Convention—approved of, and agreed in sentiment with said Laymen's Convention, and resolved, "That we hereby declare that the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church held at Buffalo in May, 1860, by its unconstitutional action, has sundered the ecclesiastical relation which has hitherto bound us together as one Church, so far as any act of theirs could do so. That we will not longer submit to the jurisdiction of said General Conference, but hereby declare ourselves separate and independent of it—still claiming to be, notwithstanding, an integral part of the Methodist Episcopal Church." This resolution was passed by the following vote: ayes 87, no 1, declining to vote 41. Soon after the adjournment of the Baltimore Conference at Staunton—in March, 1861—the unhappy civil war broke out, and was in existence in March, 1862, the time for the Baltimore Conference to meet again.

But the great body of the ministers were in Virginia, and unable to reach the place (Baltimore city) of its sitting. Most of the minority, however, (that is, the forty-one declining to vote,) were not so unfortunately situated, and hence this minority, notwithstanding the action had at Staunton, Virginia, did meet in the Light Street Church, under the jurisdiction of the General Conference, and under the Discipline of 1860, with the new chapter therein.

It followed, therefore, as a matter of course, that a large proportion of the membership in this city, and some of the preachers, in every self-respect, and in consonance with their doings at Staunton, were obliged to seek other places of worship, and to organize the Church for mutual benefit, until such time as the genuine Baltimore Conference could come together and take charge of us.

In the declaration which we adopted at our outset, a copy of which we inclose your Excellency, we distinctly and emphatically announced that we were influenced by "no political consideration whatever."

It occurs to us, therefore, that your Excellency will thus perceive that, as a Christian congregation, we were entitled to the great and inestimable privilege of worshipping God upon the same terms and conditions as all other religious assemblies of this city and State.

So believing, we secured in March, 1862, two places for public worship—the "New Assembly Rooms" and "Liddle Street." Chatsworth (another appointment) had been a preaching place, and under the Baltimore Conference since March, 1860, but joined our organization in March, 1862, for the reason that they would not submit to the new chapter.

We come to say to your Excellency that since March, 1862, up to the 15th February last, we have been conducting our public exercises to very large and highly respectable congregations, and free from any interruption whatever, and, as we fondly hope, and sincerely believe, exerting an influence creditable to society and the peace and welfare of this community. Nor did it ever, for one moment, occur to us that, without any cause whatever, military authority would be exercised to forbid us the right to worship our Maker. We were, however, disappointed, and, lamentable as it is for the age in which we live, such has actually taken place. We ask the attention of your Excellency to a copy of the order from Major Fish, Provost Marshal, to the agent of the New Assembly Rooms, and also to the order to the Trustees of the Central M. E. Church, and to the reply of our Recording Steward, and action of the official body, in which the subject is fully reviewed—all herewith inclosed.

We further beg to say to your Excellency that, being obliged to vacate the New Assembly Rooms, we rented from Mr. Edward Kearney a large public hall (Monumental Hall) and advertised, as was our custom, that we would have public preaching on Sunday, 22d of February, whereupon another order, issued by direction of Major General Schenck, a copy of which is herewith inclosed, arrested such contemplated public worship. To this last order we most respectfully ask a critical examination by your Excellency. You will perceive that it is directed to Mr. Kearney, the owner and proprietor of the Monumental Hall, a large public hall, in which several nights during the week there are public gatherings, parties, balls, soirees, &c., and yet this order to display the flag is only to be enforced "on every occasion when this congregation meets in your building."*

Sir, with the most distinguished consideration for your Excellency, we hold that it is not within the range of possibility that the Governor of Maryland can bring his mind to any other conclusion than that a more direct interference with the rights of public worship never was exercised in any country, and that such interference is in violation of the Bill of Rights of this State.

Coming, then, to your Excellency, as we now do, soliciting for our people that relief and protection which is guaranteed to us by the Constitution and laws of Maryland, we cannot and will not permit ourselves to doubt but that we shall have your sympathy and the sought-for relief, so entirely within your power to afford. Our people are scattered, our large and flourishing Sabbath school cannot meet, and by consequence the children go without that religious Sabbath training so beneficial and so important to the rising generation.

Pardon us, and we will ask of your Excellency what have we done that we are not permitted to meet as the other religious congregations in this city?

We appeal to this entire community to witness against us whether we are unworthy to enjoy the same rights and privileges as our fellow-citizens.

Finally, we say to your Excellency that as citizens of Maryland, law-abiding and order-loving, we have rights in common with our fellow-men. We ask for nothing more. Is it right to grant us less?

Will your Excellency consent that military authority shall, in violation of law, overturn and set at naught the

* The order is as follows:

HEADQUARTERS MIDDLE DEPARTMENT, 8TH ARMY CORPS,
OFFICE PROVOST MARSHAL,
BALTIMORE, Feb. 21, 1863.

MR. KEARNEY, Owner and Proprietor of Central (Monumental) Hall, corner St. Paul's and Centre streets, Baltimore City:

SIR: The congregation and clergyman which intend worshipping at your hall to-morrow, Sunday, the 21st inst., have left the New Assembly Rooms, where they formerly held service, for the purpose of evading the order in regard to the display of National Flag. Therefore you are hereby ordered to display in a conspicuous place at the head of your hall, during the entire day, to-morrow, the 22d, a large size National Flag. This not only to-morrow, but on every occasion when this congregation meets in your building.

By order Major General SCHENCK:

WM. S. FISII,
Major and Provost Marshal.

Who is it, sir, in God's name, who is it, of human composition, that shall assume to himself such high prerogative?

Begging your Excellency to excuse us for being tedious, and again imploring your aid in behalf of our afflicted congregation, whom we are anxious to bring together again by procuring a place for worship,

We are, with great respect,

Your Excellency's obedient servants,

REPLY OF GOVERNOR BRADFORD.

STATE OF MARYLAND,
EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
ANNAPOLIS, March 10, 1863.

To MESSRS. JOHN M. BECK and others,
Stewards of Central M. E. Church, &c.:

GENTLEMEN—Your letter of the 3d instant has been received, and I avail myself of the first opportunity allowed by other engagements to reply to it.

You commence by saying that having been by an extraordinary order of Major General Schenck deprived of the right and privilege of holding public worship, except upon conditions prescribed by him, you feel constrained to make application to me for that relief and protection which is guaranteed by the Constitution and laws of Maryland, and which you say you are well persuaded is entirely within my power to afford.

I have looked through your letter with some interest and curiosity to ascertain, if I could, what is the particular relief and protection which you have in view, and which I, as you think, have clearly the power to afford. But there is nothing that indicates how or by what process you expect me to interfere to redress the grievance of which you complain. Under our system of government its various co-ordinate departments are carefully separated and distinguished, and it is distinctly declared by our Constitution that "no person exercising the functions of one of said departments shall assume or discharge the duties of any other." Such being the case, it rarely, if ever, happens that any personal wrong inflicted upon the citizen is, in the first instance, a proper subject of complaint to the Executive. That department of the Government is not adapted to the investigation always necessary to be made in determining the character and extent of all such wrongs. This is a duty confided to the judicial tribunals, which can ascertain the facts, apply the law, and provide the appropriate remedy.

If, therefore, you have been wrongfully ousted from your place of worship, or suffered any unlawful interruption in your religious exercises, the courts of the State are obviously the only tribunals where all the circumstances can be properly investigated, and your legal and constitutional rights lawfully determined.

This view of the case might, perhaps, relieve me of the necessity of a further reply to your communication; but as it would seem that the same considerations could scarcely have escaped your own notice, and as you have gone with such particularity into the full history of your religious association, and of the alleged outrage upon its rights, it would seem that you may have expected that, if I could do nothing more, I might express a sympathy in your complaints, and utter some protest against the proceedings which have led to them. It is due, therefore, to you, and to myself, as well as to that frankness I desire always to observe in all communications with my fellow-citizens, that I should take a more particular notice of the facts you have brought to my attention.

In making your statement you say that you deem it essential to a proper understanding of the subject to recur to the early history of your separate organization. Hence you advert to the proceedings of the General Conference of your Church at Buffalo, in May, 1860, and to an obnoxious addition which that body made to the Discipline of the Church, as the cause of your separate organization in 1862. You refer, also, to the proceedings of the lay members of the Church, repudiating the new article of Discipline—the one in Baltimore in December, 1860, and the other at Staunton in March, 1861—and you quote the action of the Baltimore Conference of Ministers, at the last mentioned date, as declaring that the action of the General Conference referred to "has sundered the ecclesiastical relation which has hitherto bound us together as one Church." Whilst these proceedings may no doubt be a matter of interest in your Church history, neither they nor the action of the highly respectable gentlemen whose names you quote in connection therewith, have, as it appears to me, any material bearing upon the subject of your complaint.

I cannot, however, forbear saying that I think it is greatly to be regretted that, continuing as you seem to have done in an unaltered membership of the Church, and in fellowship with the Baltimore Conference for nearly two years after the adoption of the Buffalo chapter, and fully one year after the proceedings of the two Conventions to which you refer, and of the Conference of 1861, you should in March, 1862, for the first time have practically sundered your Church connection, and abandoned the time-honored edifices and associations where you had previously worshipped. I say that I cannot but regret such a proceeding at such a time. We were then in the midst of a raging conflict of arms, brought upon us confessedly by this doctrine of the right of secession. It was a time for far more engrossing thoughts and important action than any connected with the stale proceedings of past conferences and conventions, and called for at least the temporary suspension of all religious disputes.

The question of ecclesiastical discipline in 1860 had been absorbed by that of a national existence in 1862. It was no longer a contest over the Church government of one denomination of Christians, but a contest to determine whether our country itself possessed a Government that deserved the name, or was to quietly acquiesce in its own dismemberment, and see State after State despoil it of its property and defy its authority at the bidding and for the benefit of aspiring traitors who desired to govern them. Hundreds, therefore, who, in the earlier stages of your Church difficulties might have cordially co-operated with you in protesting against the Buffalo Platform, now, that the whole aspect of public affairs had assumed so threatening a character, were necessarily prompted by every patriotic inducement to discontinue all secessionary displays in the face of the calamities which political doctrines, apparently at least of a kindred kind, had already brought upon the nation.

With this passing remark upon the proceedings to which you refer as preliminary to the secession of your congregation, I proceed to the facts connected with the order of General Schenck, which you say has "set at naught the dearest and most sacred right that any man can enjoy, that of worshipping God."

This, I agree with you, one of our most sacred rights, and he who sets it at naught merits the severest censure. But what are the facts, as I gather them from your communication and the orders and correspondence accompanying it?

It seems that in March, 1862, when you abandoned your former places of worship, you secured the "New Assembly Rooms," where, from that time to the 15th of February last, you continued your religious exercises "free from any interruption whatever."

In your letter to General Schenck, of 14th of February, (a copy of which you send me), you say that when yet assembled as usual for morning service, on the preceding Sunday (the 8th of February,) "it was found that two large American flags were displayed immediately over and in the rear of the preacher's stand." It is to this display, I presume, that the Provost-Marshal, in his first order, refers. When addressing Mr. McGeech, the agent of the rooms, he says: "I understand that considerable disgust is excited in the view of a class of persons who assemble at your rooms, in consequence of the American flag being displayed there," and then directs the said agent to cause that flag to be conspicuously displayed in the same place, until further orders.

It was, therefore, the disgust manifested by some of your congregation at the flag which confronted them on the morning of the 5th of February that occasioned the first order of the military authorities, directing its continuance there. It was not displayed on the morning of the 8th in consequence of any military order, but, as I understand to be conceded, was left there inadvertently, being one of many with which the room had been decorated on the previous night, on the occasion of some ball or concert.

Here the suggestion naturally arises, that whilst all religious congregations are equally entitled to the same privileges and protection, no matter where they may worship, yet any one that selects as its sanctuary a public ball and concert room should hardly manifest its surprise, much less its disgust, at any flag that may occasionally adorn its walls, and more especially the flag of the country that shelters it.

That such a disgust was exhibited by a portion at least of your congregation seems to be an admitted fact. It is expressly so stated, as we have seen, by Major Fish, in the first order which he issued, and although he states it as the very foundation of that order, yet the statement is not denied either in the proceedings of the official members of your Church, who met in consequence of said order, and "declined any longer to occupy the New Assembly Rooms," nor in your letter to General Schenck of 14th February, wherein you in effect admit the display of some such feeling when you say that the exhibition of the flag "may have been objected to by a few." Here, then, we have the reason for the first interference of the military authorities in ordering the display of the flag. It was not because the congregation had seceded from the Conference, or because they entertained, as some have supposed, sympathies with political Secession—for, although a similar military authority has existed in your city ever since your congregation was separately organized, you have more than once adverted to the fact that it has always heretofore enjoyed its religious services "free from any interruption whatever."

It was the disgust publicly manifested by some of its members at the sight of the national ensign, accidentally left in the room where they assembled, that obliged the authorities, charged especially with the duty of upholding that flag in a war now waged for its destruction, to notice, in some appropriate way, the insult it had thus received. And herein is the obvious answer to all the complaints of an unfair discrimination against your particular congregation in making it alone the subject of the order in question. It would have been obviously unjust and inappropriate to pass any order embracing all religious assemblages merely because of the conduct of one.

Is there anything in the order itself which warrants the construction you have put upon it as "setting at naught the dearest and most sacred right that man can enjoy—that of worshipping God;" or as being "a direct interference with the right of public worship greater than which was never exercised in any country?" How, I would most respectfully ask, does it prohibit or interfere with your worship of the Almighty, under any creed, or according to any form you may see fit to adopt? These are rights justly precious everywhere in the sight of our people, and nowhere more prized than here in Maryland.

But, in God's name, does the sight of our country's standard obstruct or impair the enjoyment of such rights? How is it, let me ask, that they have been so amply provided for? How is it that here, above all the earth besides, this religious liberty, this freedom of conscience and title to equal protection, which you seem to think have been so outraged by the presence of the American ensign, have all been so carefully secured to us? How, but under the auspices of the free Government symbolized by that very flag, and which those who have shared most abundantly in its blessings are now treacherously striving to destroy?

If the order for its display in the room where you assemble is an interference with the rights of conscience, and a violation of the Bill of Rights securing to every man his peculiar religious faith without molestation, then by a parity of reasoning to order the removal of any other emblem with which you might choose to adorn your place of meeting would be equally obnoxious to the same objection. You might, therefore, hoist the rebel ensign to-morrow, and defy the military authorities to pull it down, throwing yourself upon your rights of conscience and the guaranties of the Constitution.

I am aware that in your declaration, published simultaneously with your separation from the Conference, as also in your letter to General Schenck, you dwelt with some emphasis upon the determination of your congregation to exclude everything but the gospel; to repudiate "any interference with matters of State;" to meddle not "with questions of a political nature," and to hold "no connection with any ecclesiastical body that does."

So far as this evinces a purpose to banish politics in the ordinary acceptance of that term, from the domain of the church—to exclude from the pulpit all such topics as usually divide political parties living under and recognizing the same Government—no resolution could be more commendable. And if this had been some party banner, used merely to garnish some partisan platform, I could well understand the disgust it might excite. But I am unable, I confess, to see how the two subjects or the two flags can be so confounded; and with the profoundest reverence for the teachings of religion in its most evangelical form, I have never been able to perceive how men of the purest religious faith, and devoted with the sincerest purpose to the solemn worship of God, can find, in such a purpose, anything inconsistent with the most ardent love of their country; how they can turn their back upon its flag, or refuse to offer up a prayer in its behalf, and call such an exhibition, or such offerings, politics!

Such was not the faith nor the practice of our fathers. In our revolutionary times, when making our first struggle for civil and religious freedom, patriotism and religion went hand in hand together. The men of those days clung to their country with an instinctive adoration, second only to that which they rendered to God himself; and the minister who would have refused or hesitated to worship under the flag of the one, would not long have been tolerated at the altars of the other.

Looking, therefore, to the conduct which provoked the first order of the military authorities, I can see no reason for the complaint that your congregation has been causelessly made an exception to all others; whilst in the requirements of the order itself there is certainly nothing to authorize the assumption that it is an interference with that constitutional provision which declares that no man, on account of his religious persuasion, ought "to be molested in his person or estate."

I take occasion here to suggest that if the order could be by any one regarded as trenching in any degree upon that religious liberty which it was the purpose of our Constitution to secure, there is nothing in that instrument which makes that right so absolutely sacred and paramount as the comments of yourselves, and occasionally of others, upon its inviolability, would lead us to suppose. On the contrary, the very clause which guarantees this right uses language which shows that those who framed it recognized other and higher obligations. The language employed is: "No person ought by any law to be molested in his person or estate on account of his religious persuasion or profession, or for his religious practice, unless under color of religion any man shall disturb the good order, peace or safety of the State."

Here, then, as everywhere, and under all Governments, is the supreme law to which all others are subordinate—the public safety and the public peace.

I beg that you will not for a moment suppose that in quoting the above proviso I mean to impute to you or your congregation any design to do aught, under the color of religion, to disturb the good order, peace or safety of the State. I have no such thought. But however unobjectionable may have been your purpose, gentlemen of your intelligence must, on reflection, readily perceive that in such times as these, and in a loyal community like ours, with its sensibilities profoundly stirred by the sufferings and sacrifices, the mourning and death, daily being endured for that flag, and under it, nothing would be more likely to provoke a breach of the peace than to witness any demonstration towards it savouring even of indignity or insult, and its military guardians suffering it to pass without rebuke.

I regret, gentlemen, that for such reasons as you have indicated, or indeed, for any reasons, the condition of things to which you so feelingly refer should now exist in your church: that your "people are scattered," that your "large and flourishing Sabbath school cannot meet," and that your "children go without that religious Sabbath training so beneficial and so important to the rising generation." But who is responsible for this state of things? Surely General Schenck has issued no interdict calculated to scatter either your school or congregation. If when on the morning of the 8th of February some of your congregation manifested their disgust at the sight of the flag, or, as you have expressed it, "may have objected to it," and upon their conduct, taken as the expression of the congregation, Major Fish predicated his first order; if you, or the official members of your society representing the congregation, had rebuked the conduct of the few who manifested this contempt, and had disclaimed all intentions to offer insult or offence to our Government or the flag that represents it, I feel authorized to say that the order you deem so obnoxious would have been immediately revoked.

But instead of that, your official members, convened in consequence of the order after reciting its purport, resolve, "That by reason of such order and interference, we decline any longer to occupy the New Assembly Rooms," thereby authorizing the inference that instead of repudiating the course of the few objecting members, you approved and adopted it as a congregational right and determined to abandon your church services and Sunday school at that place as long as the flag was there displayed.

As a matter of course, after this official action, when you selected another concert-room, the flag was ordered to follow you. To have done otherwise would have been but to suffer an easy evasion of the order and contempt of the authority that issued it.

Even now, I will venture to say, notwithstanding the past action of your official members, if they will still rebuke the expression of contempt referred to, and disclaim all hostility to the Government or the flag, your congregation and schools may again come together and enjoy all the advantages they ever did.

If you refuse this, and will not tolerate the presence of the flag, but, rather than either, choose to suffer your people to be scattered and your children to go without religious instruction, an intelligent community, especially jealous of all its religious rights, but still perfectly understanding the principles on which they rest, will be able to determine where lies the fault.

I am, very respectfully,

Your obedient servant,

A. W. BRADFORD.

BALTIMORE, April 2d, 1863.

To his Excellency A. W. BRADFORD,
Governor of Maryland:

SIR: The regard due to the rights and interests of the religious organization which we represent impels us to call your attention to the misunderstanding of the facts and principles embodied in our former communication, which pervades your reply of March 10th.

And we are sure that the interest of the question involved will be to your Excellency a sufficient apology for this second intrusion upon your time.

We do not claim to be thoroughly informed as to the technical distinctions between the various departments of Government, and there may have been wanting in the form of our address to you, as Governor of the State, the full sense of the distinctive rights and functions of each.

We had no intention to disregard these, nor would we, by any word or act, induce any one department to trench upon the prerogatives of the others.

But we did not suppose that the functions of the Governor were confined to any mere technical routine of performance. We were rather accustomed to look to the Governor as the guardian of the rights and honor of the State, sworn to see her Constitution and laws faithfully observed and enforced, and prepared, at least, to use his official influence to uphold and maintain the interests secured by law to the very least of her citizens whenever made cognizant of any assault thereupon.

The history of the past two years has quite satisfied us of the entire futility of any appeal to the judiciary, nor had we any disposition to bring about collision between these two. We preferred to employ means more congenial to the spirit of our religion, and sure, as we still are, that the official influence of the Governor of the State might be used with effect to relieve us of the embarrassments and disabilities under which we now labor as a Church.

In appealing to you to exercise that influence, we naturally endeavored to make it clear that we were not, in any sense or to any extent, an offending party: that we had not brought ourselves under the operation of that qualifying clause of the Constitution to which you refer, namely: "Unless under color of religion, any man shall disturb the good order, peace, and safety of society." For this purpose, we summed up the facts connected with the history of our organization, which all show that without the smallest reference to any State or political principles or measures, we were and are intent solely upon maintaining the truth and purity of Christian doctrine and practice.

We did not claim immunity from the pains and penalties attaching to crime against the State. We set up no "higher law" beneath which we might find shelter from the operation of the civil power. We were careful to set forth our recognition of, and obedience to, the "higher powers," and thought ourselves entitled, in all righteousness, to the protection in our worship guaranteed under these powers.

Thus, sir, your own references, besides the entire spirit of your communication, justify the recital of those facts and show their "bearing upon the subject of our complaint."

We regret to see the entire misconstruction of those facts in your reply to our statement.

Referring to the action of our body, you say: "I think it is greatly to be regretted that, continuing, as you seem to have done, in an unaltered membership of the Church, and in fellowship with the Baltimore Conference for nearly two years after the adoption of the Buffalo chapter, and fully one year after the proceedings of the two Conventions to which you refer, and of the Conference of 1861, you should in March, 1862, for the first time, have practically sundered your Church connection?" &c.

Will your Excellency be pleased to revert to the acts in the case? The jurisdiction of the Buffalo General Conference was thrown off by the large majority of the Baltimore Conference immediately after the action referred to, or, more properly, that jurisdiction was never admitted. Its discipline was not received, that of 1856 being adhered to, and the membership by an overwhelming majority declaring their resolve no longer to accept the leadership of the Church in the North in matters of faith or practice.

The voice of the people was heard in the Convention of December, 1860, the earliest practicable moment, and again in March, 1861. In obedience to that voice and their own convictions, the session of the Baltimore Conference in March, 1861, being the first after the aforementioned action of the General Conference, declared its absolute independence of the jurisdiction of the General Conference, and its connection therewith dissolved. It was no prospective separation; it was an act accomplished, and so announced in the pastoral letter afterward issued by the authority of the Baltimore Conference.

At the instance, and for the sake of the minority, certain additional resolutions were passed, whose design was to prevent an immediate division in the Conference, and to give the minority opportunity to appeal to the annual conferences in the North for redress, they being pledged, in case of the failure of that appeal, to side with the majority.

Thus, sir, we did not remain in "unaltered connection with the Church" in the North.

By the authoritative action of the Conference, we were completely separated therefrom. We should otherwise have abandoned our connection with the Baltimore Conference. And it happened through the mere accident of the times that we were driven from "the time-honored edifices" in which we were wont to worship. The minority, taking advantage of the absence of the majority, an absence entirely unavoidable, declared themselves the Conference, and expelled their absent brethren, without trial or hearing, from their body. Of course, we, who adhered to the action of the Conference of Staunton, both ministers and laymen, shared the same fate.

Our present position, you may clearly see from all this, sir, is not owing to any want of promptness in recognizing and acting upon the principles which we now avow. That principle has been embodied in the action of our Conference ever since the session of the General Conference of 1860. We have had no connection with that body since the decisive action of the Baltimore Conference in March, 1861, and by our fellowship with the Baltimore Conference we meant then as we mean now—fellowship with the majority of that body; for we cannot recognize the right of some thirty-five or forty to declare more than twice their number to be no longer members of that body—a declaration beyond their power to make in the presence of the majority. Instead of measures so extreme, common courtesy should have suggested to these ministers that which was proposed by the few ministers of the majority, in connection with the laity, who happened to be within reach of the place appointed for the session of the Conference in 1862, namely: some measures of compromise by which the question at issue might be waived during these times of trouble, and the unity of the body preserved without committing any man to a final position. But we do not propose to judge those who differ from us. We only desire to show that we assert merely a Christian principle, having no connection with any principle or matter of State, and that, recognizing the extreme sensitiveness of the public mind, to which you make allusion, we exhausted all the means in our power to prevent any division at that time, and only took our action when we were driven to it by the relentless spirit of the minority, who by these unforeseen circumstances acquired the power in this section of our Conference.

We deem it almost entirely needless to reply to the charges alleged—if not in direct form, at least in the confusion of the terms applied to these movements in your communication—of endorsing and abetting the doctrine and practice of political secession by our action.

We distinctly disavow any connection in theory or practice with that or any other political or State doctrine. We simply affirm and have acted upon the right—never before questioned in a civilized land—of withdrawing from any religious organization so soon as we cease to put faith in its doctrine or endorse its ecclesiastical principles.

We do not think it possible that you should now question that right. Our faith as to the Government is embodied in the twenty-third article of religion—the same received by the whole M. E. Church North, and reads thus:

"Of the Rulers of the United States of America.

"The President, the Congress, the General Assemblies, the Governors, and the Councils of State, as the delegates of the people, are the rulers of the United States of America, according to the division of power made by the Constitution of the United States, and by the Constitutions of their respective States.

"And the said States are a sovereign and independent nation, and ought not to be subject to any foreign jurisdiction."

In a word, sir, we hold it to be our supreme duty and right as a Church to maintain and propagate all Christian truth, and to oppose, by purity of life, and by the pure preachings of the gospel, all error in doctrine or practice.

And in so far as the State is concerned, we declare ourselves "subject to the higher powers," believing that "the powers that be are ordained of God." And now, sir, bear with us, while, in as few words as may be, we restate, in entire conformity with all the foregoing principles and facts, the subject of our complaints.

It is not to the United States flag, abstractly considered, that we object. We live under that flag. We are governed by the Constitution and laws which that flag represents. We honor it as the symbol of those great principles which our fathers secured to us by sacrifices of which it is also the memorial. We mourn, sir, that that honored emblem should be tarnished by perversion to any uses at war with all the principles which it represents, and render to that extent utterly vain all the sacrifices which it brings to memory.

The order of Major Fish, grounded upon "disgust" said to have been excited by the display of the flag, certainly (we trust unintentionally) misrepresented our congregation. We said in our letter to General Schenck of February 14th, that a few "may have objected." Does that mean disgust? They may have objected to it as inappropriate to the worship of God, a service in which we lay aside for the time the relations of earth, and give expression only to our sense of our relation to the Most High. Or they may have objected, because such display was in violation of the contract with the janitor to remove all worldly decorations. Or they may have objected, as we do now, because they supposed it was done under an order which singled us out from all the worshippers of this land to be put, as such, under the control of the military power, and forbidden to engage in such worship except upon conditions and under circumstances ordained by that power.

Nor ought we be held responsible for the "few" who "may have objected," they not being members of our organization so far as we know. And when, by the explanation of the janitor of the building, it was made manifest that such was not the case, no word of complaint was heard. There was an hour of quiet worship, and then the throng of worshippers quietly returned to their homes, without one word or look of "disgust." This, too, was the case at the evening service.

We dare aver that less dissatisfaction or more entire respect for the flag could not nor would have been exhibited by any other congregation in the city. Nor was it "in consequence of the order" that our official body was convened on Tuesday night following: that was the regular weekly meeting of the body. And there—not by way of endorsing that "disgust" to which Major Fish's order, at that meeting first received, referred, for we knew then and know now of no such expressions of feeling; but solely because we held the simple worship of God to be pure and sacred a thing to be brought under the dictation and control of any human power, so long as nothing therein conflicted with the good order, peace, and safety of the State—we declined any longer occupying the New Assembly Rooms.

Pardon us, sir, for insisting that the maintenance of this principle is essential to the very life of the Church of Christ. If we abandon it we lay open the Church to the whole tide of earthly influences, and all hope of accomplishing the mission of Christianity is lost.

From this your Excellency can see how entirely inapplicable is the very strange argument by which you would make it appear that we, "by throwing ourselves upon our rights of conscience and the guarantees of the Constitution, might hoist the rebel ensign and defy the authorities to pull it down." The guarantees of the Constitution, as you yourself show, and we admit, do not extend to the protection of any parties acting against the good order, peace and safety of society. We claim no rights of conscience beyond the limitations of the Constitution. To hoist an earthly ensign, more particularly one which to display is in direct violation of one of the laws of the State, and would so manifestly disturb the public peace, would sap the very life principle of our organization. No such inference as that, sir, can be drawn from this proceeding.

But we may infer that if Major General Schenck has the right to prescribe the terms under which alone we may worship God, then by parity of reasoning he may do the same for every other congregation in this city. He may suppress the Liturgy of the Protestant Episcopal Church, and take away the insignia of the Roman Catholic service. He may even go further, and upon the ground that there are some in each congregation unfriendly to the Administration, he may forbid entirely assemblages for worship.

Your Excellency, occupying a position of such influence and responsibility, should, above all others, consider to what these things tend. The parties may be few and the interests small concerned in this case,

"But the evil leaven will spread," and the time may come when it will be wished that occasion had been taken to stay this baneful principle while in its incipency, its first birth, in this land. These inalienable rights of relation between God and man may yet be preserved in their integrity.

But, if this time pass and this cause be not sustained, the efforts and endurance of a generation will hardly suffice to restore to us our birthright of religious liberty.

For these reasons, and upon these grounds, we call upon your Excellency to exert your influence not only in our behalf, but in support of a great principle of our Government and of our common Christianity.

The community has decided upon this case and with great unanimity has condemned this infraction of religious right and privilege.

By endeavoring to do away with this evil you will but respond to the sentiment of this city and State, and of every community to which the whole facts are known.

If we fail to secure our rights, then we must suffer. We can only make our appeal to the Most High, the Great Head of the Church.

Very respectfully, your Excellency's obedient servants,

STATE OF MARYLAND, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,

April 9, 1863.

To JOHN M. BUCK, Esq., and others,

Stewards, &c.

GENTLEMEN: I received, upon the 6th instant, your letter of the 2d, written, as you say, to call my attention to "the misunderstanding of the facts and principles" embodied in your former communication, and pervading my reply thereto of 10th March last.

Whatever may be my misunderstanding of the principles assumed in your former communication, it is not likely that anything I can add to what I have already said will tend to reconcile the different views we respectively take of the subject; nor have I the time to devote to such further discussions. I cannot perceive, however, wherein I have so misunderstood the facts of the case. You devote about one-half of your last letter to showing that when I said that "in March, 1862, you for the first time practically sundered your Church connection and abandoned the time-honored edifices," &c., I misapprehended the facts, and, to prove it, you recur again with great particularity to the proceedings of the Conferences and Conventions of 1861. But, though these have, as I before remarked, but little bearing on the subject, they were all fully recited in your former letter, and were repeated and quoted by me in my reply. And whilst allowing all that can be claimed for them, still I maintain that in making the declaration above quoted I stated the case strictly as it was.

The question was not what the Baltimore Conference of 1861 or the Laymen's Convention of 1860 had done or declared, but what was the origin and action of your particular congregation, and, if I am correctly informed, you never did until March, 1862, do any act or institute any proceeding to set on foot any separate congregational organization, but up to that time occupied the same churches, recognized the same appointments, listened to the same ministers, and were governed in all respects by the same laws and ordinances with all the other members of the Methodist Episcopal Church in the city of Baltimore. It was the case, I certainly did not misapprehend the facts as I intended to state them when I said that you then, "for the first time, practically sundered your Church connections."

In referring to that part of my reply wherein I call your attention to the functions respectively pertaining to the different departments of the Government, and to the fact that such complaints as yours should come properly before the judicial tribunals, you say, "the history of the past two years has quite satisfied us of the entire futility of any appeal to the judiciary." And referring to the view you had been accustomed to take of the office of the Governor, as "the guardian of the rights and honor of the State," &c., evidently still assume that the case of your complaint was one that called for his interference or influence.

I do not understand how or why it is that you have such little faith in any appeal to the judiciary; it certainly does not accord with the views taken by other citizens who have thought themselves aggrieved by the action of military officers, and have, if I am rightly informed, instituted quite a number of appeals to that department on such account. As it regards your opinion of what ought to be the course of the Executive in interposing an influence against such aggressions, it may not be amiss to refer you to the example of other Governors. It is possible that the particular one I have in view, might with some have more weight than any argument I could offer.

On the 4th of March last, the day after the date of your first letter to me, some gentlemen of Virginia, mill owners near the city of Richmond, addressed to the Governor of that State a communication very similar in its apparent object to your own.

They state to him that on the preceding day "the Commissary General of the Confederate States of America" had impressed all their flour in the mill, which cost them "considerably more than the price fixed by the Government." They further state that the Government had notified them that "it will forcibly take possession of the legitimate products of our mills, for which we pay, under the protection of the State of Virginia, heavy taxes, and also a special corporation tax," and they appeal to the Governor in these words: "We lay our grievances before you, and call upon you to protect us from the open and flagrant violation of our rights, and ask that an armed force may be furnished us to prevent our property from being carried off vi et armis not only at less than cost, but far less than its market value."

Here would seem to be, indeed, an open and flagrant violation of private rights that needed no straining to make it palpable. It was no technical or constructive wrong that required long arguments to elucidate, but a direct and most offensive invasion of the rights of property is obvious to every one.

Now let me call your attention to Governor Letcher's response to this appeal. It is contained in ten lines, and I give the pith and words of it:

"I regard the act of which you complain as oppressive and committed without lawful authority. The only remedy I know of is the institution of suits for damages against the officers committing these acts."

Whether "the history of the past two years" has or has not served to show that an appeal to the Virginia judiciary is less futile than to ours, is a question that you can as readily determine as I; but little as I am disposed to look to such places for precedents, yet considering the peculiar views of that Commonwealth and the particular pride it has heretofore taken in maintaining States rights against flagrant Federal encroachments—to say nothing of the confidence with which we have been advised to follow in its lead—when the Governor of such a State, in reference to such an outrage committed by "the Confederate Government," and, as he admits, without authority, "knows no other remedy" than suits against the officer committing it, I think the Governor of Maryland, sworn though he may be "to see her Constitution and laws faithfully observed and enforced," may be excused for referring you to similar tribunals, and from using his official influence to remove the National Flag from your meeting-house.

I am glad to hear you say that you still reverence that flag as you do—that you "honor it as the symbol of those great principles which our fathers secured to us." Under the influence of such feelings I may still hope to hear you, as I suggested in my last letter, rebuke those who insulted it, and disavow all hostility to it or the Government it represents.

It is painful to remember how that "honored emblem" has been desecrated within the last two years by Southern mobs, as they dragged it at their horses' heels or trampled it under foot; but whilst the remembrance of these proceedings renders it all the more incumbent upon us to promptly screen it from even implied dishonor, I can hardly hope that these are the occurrences to which you refer when you say you mourn over the perversions which have tarnished it.

In endeavoring to show, as you do in your last letter, that there was no such expression of disgust on the part of any of your congregation as was imputed to them by Major Fish, you will pardon me for saying that I think you have hardly met the question with that frankness to be expected of you. You say "they may have objected to it as inappropriate to the worship of God, a service in which we lay aside, for the time, the relations of earth," &c., "or they may have objected to it because such display was in violation of the contract with the janitor to remove all worldly decorations." Now, let me ask you, as truthful and candid men, do you believe that they did object on any such grounds? Was it really, in your opinion, their pure and spiritual ideas of the proper adornments or appearance of the sanctuary that gave rise to their objections?

A portrait or a fancy painting, a kettle drum or a bass viol, are each and all of them about as much of a "worldly decoration," and have quite as much "relation to earth" and as little "relation to the Most High," as the American ensign, but do you really think that if the janitor had by chance left in view any such appliances of the assembly of the previous night that the men who left the room or refused to enter it whilst the flag was there would have manifested the same holy horror of such worldly mementoes, and refused to worship until they were removed? If such is your opinion, you are of course right in suggesting the possible explanations you do.

Equally imaginative, as it seems to me, are the monstrous evils you predict as likely to result from the unhallowed proceedings of General Schenck, and by reason of which you tell us that "the efforts and endurance of a generation will hardly suffice to restore to us our birthright of religious liberty." It seems almost impossible to conceive how the most exuberant fancy can, upon such a ground-work, conjure up so alarming a picture, and how it is that though the General had covered all the walls of the Assembly Rooms with the National ensign, that would lead us to expect him in the next place to "suppress the liturgy of the Protestant Episcopal Church, and take away the insignia of the Roman Catholic service."

That you should dwell, as you do, upon such unfounded and fanciful evils, and regard them with such engraving and ominous forebodings in times like these, when the whole nation is groaning under the calamities which this unrighteous rebellion has brought upon us, is not among the least remarkable wonders which "the history of the past two years" has developed.

Fortunate, indeed, may you and your congregation be considered if this war imposes on them no barmen more serious than the one of which you complain, and that whilst "intent solely upon maintaining the truth and purity of Christian doctrine" you encounter no other interruption of that religious enjoyment, than the necessity of turning your eyes upon that flag, and witnessing the efforts of those intent upon maintaining its supremacy, and the truth and purity and very existence of all popular institutions.

Very respectfully your obedient servant,

A. W. BRADFORD.

The printing of these communications from the Baltimore American appears to be necessary to a full statement of the case:

THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH AND THE DISLOYAL SEPARATORS.

To the Editors of the American:

The editor of the New York Journal of Commerce in a recent number of that paper prefaces a narrative of certain events in Baltimore with the following remarks:

"THE BALTIMORE CHURCH CASE.—Such cases as that of the arrest of the Rev. Mr. Dashiell, and the trouble in the Methodist Churches in Baltimore, are deeply to be regretted. They ought not to occur, and there is no need that they should occur. In every instance they weaken the hold of the Administration on the people, and shake confidence among the more quiet and non-demonstrative portion of the community.

"It appears that the division of the Methodist Church into North and South, which took place some time ago, and the adoption by the Church North of a special dogma on the subject of slaveholding, resulted in the establishment of two or three Methodist churches in Baltimore who were unwilling to accept the new items introduced into the creed. We do not profess to understand the differences, but the simple fact is that these Methodists in Baltimore issued a statement that they could not 'conscientiously submit to the jurisdiction of the Buffalo General Conference, nor become members of the church under the New Discipline of 1860.' It matters very little what the points were. In a question of religious worship, we suppose all American people agree that these people were free to follow their consciences, if their consciences did not impel them to a violation of law. There is a Chinese temple in full blast in San Francisco, and Jew and Gentile worship everywhere in this country according to their religious notions. There has, however, been a persecuting spirit among some of the Baltimore people against these worshippers of the Methodist persuasion. If they were a congregation of Rebels, which they are not, they ought not to be disturbed in the peaceful worship of God, so long as their worship was not treason. But some one wanted to get up a row. On Saturday night, in the dark, some one nailed a small cotton handkerchief flag over the door of one of their churches or places of worship. It was the notice, and doubtless intended to be the notice, of the collection of a crowd, and the disturbance of their morning service. What ensued is thus stated by Rev. Mr. Dashiell, who is a highly esteemed Methodist clergyman, and not at all liable to the charge of being a 'Secessionist.'—[Here follows a history of the affair, with which the public is familiar.]

The history of the times demands an impartial and truthful statement concerning the relation of the Methodist Episcopal Church of this city with reference to the separation of a number of its members from the jurisdiction of its acknowledged Bishops and Conference, and the formation of the separatists into what they denominate the "Central M. E. Church." This Church, so called, which is composed of three distinct congregations, is presided over by several ministers formerly connected with the Baltimore Annual Conference.

The General Conference which met at Buffalo in 1860 introduced into the Discipline of the Church a new chapter on the subject of slavery. The adoption of this new rule excited the Church in Maryland and Virginia as being unwise and offensive. Many of the ministers and laity solemnly protested against the objectionable canon, and declared their purpose to seek redress at the next General Conference in 1864, which body alone would have power to alter or change the offensive chapter.

Others, however, deemed the passage of the new chapter sufficient cause for a violent disintegration of the Church in Maryland and Virginia from the North and West, without awaiting or desiring any relief by the General Conference, and forthwith proceeded to institute disorganizing schemes leading to that result.

Much of this excitement doubtless arose from the sympathy which existed among the Church in Maryland or their brethren in Virginia, many of whom were connected with the Baltimore Conference.

Conventions of the laity were held during the year 1860 in this city and elsewhere, for the purpose of separating from the other portions of the Church that had adopted the obnoxious rule or chapter on slavery. In these conventions many highly respectable and loyal gentlemen participated; but as the political difficulties of the nation increased, and, to some extent, involved the Church, those persons sacrificed their personal preferences as to ecclesiastical organization for their country's good. Not so with others, who could see no connection between the disintegration of the Church and the proposed division of the nation—if indeed they did not desire it—although the subject of slavery was intimately connected with both.

On January 17, 1861, a large and influential meeting of the Methodists of Baltimore was held in Light Street Church, designed to allay the excitement, to counsel moderation, and to prevent the evils of precipitate and improper action in reference to the new chapter. Among the reasons assigned in the proceedings is the following significant sentence: "It is regarded that the agitation of the subject of slavery in the councils of the Church is dangerous at this time, especially in view of the distracted condition of the country." This timely warning restrained many from further efforts in the cause of disruption, and strengthened the hands of those who were inclined to await the settlement of our national difficulties, which were daily becoming more and more intricate.

The Baltimore Annual Conference which met at Staunton, Virginia, in March 1861, consummated the plan of the majority of the preachers—and which was approved by the Laymen's Convention that assembled at the same time and place—for a prospective separation of the Conference from the other portions of the Church, and leaving the Bishops to decide before March, 1862, whether they would join their interests with the new organization under the old name, or otherwise.

Meanwhile our national troubles culminated, and the rebellious war was transferred from the farther South to the State of Virginia, and nearly all communication between the Church in that State and Maryland was cut off.

The Conference at Staunton adjourned to meet in Baltimore, March, 1862, at which time as many of the members as could or would attend its session convened; Bishop James presiding. The session held in Light Street Church was harmonious, and provision was made for the recognition of absent ministers who might report themselves at the next Conference—to be held in Georgetown in March next, 1863.

Up to the meeting of the Conference in March, 1862, no rupture had occurred in the Church in Baltimore. Revs. E. F. Insey, A. W. Wilson, T. E. Carson, W. J. Perry, and J. A. Williams, all of this city, refused to recognize the Conference which met at Light street, and were entered on the minutes as withdrawn.

In the Baltimore American of March 15, 1862, a notice appeared addressed "To the Methodist Community and Others," announcing that the Revs. E. F. Insey and A. W. Wilson would preach at the New Assembly Rooms on the following day, which was the Sabbath. On the 22d of March, the following week, an announcement was published for services in the "Central Methodist Episcopal Church," &c.

The new movement being now inaugurated, the separatists retired from the Church by certificate of membership, or otherwise, as best suited their own state of mind. It is believed that from all sources not more than five hundred persons have joined their organization; but their congregations, including their Sunday Schools, would perhaps number three as many.

The line has become distinctly drawn between the schismatics and the Church. The members of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Baltimore, if not almost to a man, at least very generally, are loyal to the General Government, and desire the perpetuity of the National Union; while none of the schismatics profess any sympathy for either. Naturally enough the new society was considered a disloyal association, while some of its adherents did not hesitate to call those who did not follow their leadership Abolitionists, Black Republicans, Lincolnites, &c. If there be any loyal citizens connected with the "Central Methodist Episcopal Church" they are certainly in such association as may well form the ground of reasonable doubt of their loyalty. In short, does not their every public act favor secession, point directly against the integrity of the United States, and treat with indignity our dearest national emblem? Our deliberate opinion is that there is not one truly loyal man, woman, or child, in connection with this so-called "Methodist" Church, and that it is composed entirely of the disloyal and discordant secession element of this city.

1. From the above statement it will be seen that there is no "trouble in the Methodist Episcopal Church in Baltimore," as erroneously stated by the New York editor. The number of white members and probationers in Baltimore is about ten thousand, of whom more than nine thousand adhere to the Church. The circumstance of Mr. Dashiell, who is a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church, being connected with the "trouble" in this city, was altogether on his part voluntary, and a matter in which he, as a Methodist Episcopalian, was no more concerned than if he were a resident of New York. The whole thing, so far as he is concerned, grew out of the fact that he was the owner of the property where the flag was placed, which fact was probably unknown to the parties who placed it there. This, we think, sufficient on this point.

2. That it was neither "the division of the Methodist Church into North and South," which transpired nineteen years ago, in 1844, nor "the adoption by the Church North of a special dogma on the subject of slaveholding," which occurred in the spring of 1860, that "resulted in the establishment of two or three Methodist Churches in Baltimore," which did not occur until the spring of 1862, two years after the time the statement of the New York editor would lead its readers to believe the new organization took place; and so far from dating back nearly three years to the General Conference, it is not yet one year old; all this we think our narrative has made sufficiently apparent. These facts being established, all the conclusions of the New York editor, founded on the false premise of the loyalty of the "Central Methodist Episcopal Church," either to their mother church or the United States, are found to be—like their premises—also false. We are, therefore, not at all surprised to hear him say "we do not pretend to understand the differences between the loyal and disloyal Methodists of Baltimore;" and that "it matters very little, what the points were." Certainly not, if we wish to remain in the dark ourselves and to blind others; but if we desire to "come to the light" and establish the truth, then it is of much importance "what the points were," and we have honestly attempted to set them forth without indulging in any reproachful or vindictive language. But we may hereafter have more to say on the subject if necessary.

THE CARD OF REV. MR. DASHIELL.

Editors of the American—You have consented to allow me space to correct the errors in your report of my arrest and imprisonment by the military authorities of this Department. I proceed to do so.

1. The charge was stated to be the tearing down and destroying of the American flag. I did not tear it down, but removed it and the rude staff together. I did not destroy it. It was not injured, is now in my possession, and was offered to the Provost Marshal in disproof of the charge.

2. It was said the flag was put up by some Union people. Who knows this? Did your reporter, or the one who sent the despatch to the Associated Press, know who put it up? It was evidently placed upon the building by disorderly mischief-makers. (1.) The flag itself was a small one and cost perhaps fifty cents. (2.) It was put up in the night and hurriedly. (3.) It was nailed to the outside of a second-story window, and the window was nailed fast from the outside. (4.) Major Fish distinctly denied having had it placed there. (5.) I had not received any notification from the authorities, civil or military. (6.) Nobody has a right to place a flag upon my premises without my consent. For these reasons I believe no Union people put it up. Some rowdies, upon instigation of two or three officeholders, did the deed to provoke disturbance, and to burlesque the orders of this military department about flags upon places of worship. I should be sorry to believe otherwise, or to think that you supposed any respectable man capable of so mean and cowardly a trespass upon the rights of property.

3. It was said that I was the minister of the congregation. This is another error. Whatever I may think of the movement, I have never preached for them, and am not a member.

4. It was said that I was going to the Sunday School. Another error. There was no one present in the building at the time.

5. That I kicked out the glass. This is utterly false. To reach the flag I was compelled to force the window, as it was nailed from the outside. I broke the glass with my umbrella handle.

6. It is said that I jumped into a carriage, and drove off. The carriage was at my own door, five squares off, in another street, and waiting for me to go with Sterling Thomas, Esq., to the Penitentiary, to preach.

7. Personally, I care very little about such displays of flags. I believe no military or civil officer has a right to place them upon private property, and that such petty acts are injurious to any cause, by encouraging the "bad fellows of a baser sort" to imitate the conduct of their superiors, and by creating special distinctions in the community, when each should enjoy unnoledsted his rights, and if charged with wrong, suffer by law, and not mob rule, after a fair trial by the established courts.

As to my release, you have told your readers that I was "released upon a parole dictated by the Government." The following letter, that tendered the parole which is herewith submitted, will prove that it was the second parole offered to me, and that it was carefully accommodated to my sense of right. I assure you that if Major Fish, as Provost Marshal, had not lowered his tone, and urged in respectful language his appeal to sign, I should yet have been in Fort McHenry.

[For the papers referred to, see ante.]

This parole must be interpreted by the official document that introduced it. In that document I am told "you said to me it would have been better," &c. In the parole the word "duty" is substituted for "it would have been better." The meaning, as I understood it, is this—that it would have been prudent and expedient, in view of the disturbances about the flag at the New Assembly rooms, to have ascertained with certainty whether the flag was put up by authority. And indeed I am now willing to add that it would have been more becoming in me, as a minister of the Gospel, to have delayed any action until the Sabbath had passed, and then to have notified the police or the military before I removed it. This, however, decides nothing about the right of putting up flags on private property without the owner's consent. Yours truly,

JOHN H. DASHIELL.

THE MCPHEETERS CASE.

ORDER OF MAJOR GENERAL CURTIS.

OFFICE PROVOST MARSHAL GENERAL,
DEPARTMENT OF THE MISSOURI,
ST. LOUIS, MO., December 19, 1862.

[SPECIAL ORDER No. 152.]

WHEREAS, On account of unmistakable evidence of sympathy with the rebellion on the part of Rev. Sam'l B. McPheeters, Pastor of the Pine Street Church, certain loyal members of his congregation, about six months since, urged him to avow his sentiments openly, and to take a stand in favor of the Government, which he refused to do, and has also published and circulated two letters within the last two weeks, in which he not only refuses to declare whether he is in favor of the success of the authorities of the nation in their efforts to put down a cruel and desolating rebellion, and has failed to remove a wide-spread and increasing impression, that he desires the success of the rebel cause; and whereas, the said McPheeters, acting with others of the same denomination, has used all the influence of his ministerial character to prevent the body of the Church with which he is connected, from declaring or manifesting its loyalty to the Government, and has refused to observe, in their obvious meaning and intent, the recommendations of the President of the United States to the various churches, and has allowed the influence of his wife, his brothers, and intimate associates, to seduce him from an open and manly support of the Government into active sympathy with the rebellion, whereby the influence of his ministerial position has greatly encouraged the enemies of the Government in their wicked schemes for its overthrow, and is still exerting an injurious influence, especially upon the youth and other members of his congregation, leading them to believe that he sympathizes with the rebels, and justifies their cause, and to adopt sentiments of hostility to the Government and to become active rebels; and whereas, in all his course of unfriendliness to the Government, and sympathy with, and favor to, rebels, the said McPheeters has been stimulated and encouraged, if not led on, by his wife, who openly avows herself a rebel; whereby the said McPheeters and his wife, have forfeited the right to the protection and favor of the Government in their present position, and have become promoters of rebellion and civil discord. Therefore, it is ordered that the said McPheeters and his wife leave the State of Missouri, within ten days after the service of this order, and that they take up their residence within the free States, north of Indianapolis, and west of Pennsylvania, and remain there during the war, and that said McPheeters cease from this date to exercise the functions of his office within the State of Missouri, and that he deliver to the Clerk of Pine Street Church all books, records and papers belonging to that Church.

It is further ordered, that the church edifice, books and papers, at the corner of Eleventh and Pine Streets, be placed under the control of three loyal members of Pine Street Church, namely: George P. Strong, James M. Corbitt and John M. Ferguson, who shall see that its pulpit be filled by a loyal minister of the Gospel, who can invoke the blessing of the head of the Church upon the efforts of the Government to re-establish its authority.

By command of Major General Curtis.

F. A. DICK,

Provost Marshal General Dept of the Missouri.

LETTER OF DR. MCPHEETERS TO ATTORNEY GENERAL BATES.

ST. LOUIS, MO., Dec. 23, 1862.

HON. EDWARD BATES,

Attorney-General of the United States:

DEAR SIR: KNOWING how much your time is occupied in the discharge of the duties of your office, it is with extreme reluctance that I ask your consideration of the case which I have to submit. And if it were an individual or private matter, or one of small moment, I would not trouble you, but it is one so important in the principle involved, and may be so far-reaching in its consequences, that I feel compelled to call your official attention to it.

Inclosed I send you an order of Major General Curtis, and the documents and papers connected with and resulting in this order.

From these papers it will be seen that a question of a purely ecclesiastical nature has been raised between some of the members of my Church and myself as to the rights involved in the relation of a pastor to his people, to wit: whether the members of a Presbyterian Church have a right to demand of their pastor that he should define in writing his views and position on civil and political questions. For the reasons set forth at large in the accompanying documents, I denied and resisted this claim of right. My whole action in this matter has been the result of religious convictions and my life-long views of the nature and duty of the Gospel ministry. The members of my Church who made this demand, at first tried to coerce obedience by ecclesiastical means. They tried to get a majority of the Church to ask for a dissolution of the pastoral relation. In this they utterly failed. Four-fifths of the Church, and all of the Church Session, numbering seven, except one, without distinction of party or opinion, adhered to me. Intimations had been thrown out in conversation, that if, in no other way, the military authorities would be appealed to to enforce their views. I have no positive evidence as to the persons who brought the matter before the military authorities. But the order of General Curtis, on its face, shows that it rests upon this controversy in my Church.

It is proper for me further to state that no notice was given me, nor was I examined, or in any way questioned as to the truth or falsehood of the charges made. Now, the points to which I desire to call your official attention are these:

First. That the military authorities have assumed to decide an ecclesiastical question between me and some of the members of my charge, and that they have construed my denial of the right which they claim to demand of me as their pastor—an answer to civil and political questions—as an act of disloyalty to the Government.

Second. That in this order the military authorities have made my action in the Church court upon questions purely ecclesiastical, a matter not only of military review, but of military punishment. The language of the order is: "And whereas the said McPheeters, acting with others of the same denomination, has used all the influence of his ministerial character to prevent the body of the Church with which he is connected from declaring or manifesting its loyalty to the Government." This can only refer to my course in the last General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church; for these questions have not come up in any other Church courts with which I am connected. I did, however, in the General Assembly of May last, oppose certain resolutions introduced into that body, which I regarded as an indirect violation of the Constitution of the Presbyterian Church, which says: "Synods or councils are to handle or conclude nothing but what is ecclesiastical, and are not to intermeddle with civil affairs which concern the commonwealth, unless by way of humble petition in cases extraordinary, or by way of advice for satisfaction of countenance, if they be thereunto required by the civil magistrate."—Confession of Faith, Chapter XXXI: § 4. I said nothing as to the merits of the civil question upon which the decision of the Assembly was asked. I only maintained that it had no right to "handle or conclude" such matters. This was certainly no offence for which I should be subjected to military punishment, and, I humbly submit, a subject upon which it was not proper for them to decide.

Third. It will moreover be seen that the military authorities are dealing with me not as a citizen, but distinctly and formally as a minister of the Gospel. They commanded me to "cease from this date the functions of" my "office in the State of Missouri." Now, my office as a minister of the Gospel, I do not receive from the State but from the church of Christ, and its functions can only be suspended by those from whom I received my office, and it seems to me that the military authorities should not sit in judgment upon that office, that they should only know me as a citizen, and only deal with me as such.

Fourth. It will be further seen in the order that the military authorities take command not only of the church edifice, but of the books and papers, i. e., the church records, and order them to be given into the hands of three individuals, who, while they are members of the church, and one of them an elder, are not the persons to whom the church has or would commit them if permitted to declare her will; and further still it will be seen from this order, that these same three individuals are appointed by the military to fill the pulpit, and determine what kind of religious instruction the church shall have. All this is not only done, but it is published to the world in an order which will be read through the country.

I have felt it to be my duty, not only as a minister of the Gospel, but as a good citizen, to call the distinct attention of the Government to this matter, and ask if this order is not in accordance with the Constitution, laws, and usages of the United States, that such steps may be taken as shall be necessary to correct it. In the meantime I design to render implicit obedience to all these orders, for while I cannot admit that my ministerial office, or the government and worship of the church, is under the direction of the civil or military authorities, yet I feel it my duty to set an example of obedience, and to wait the correction which I feel convinced will be made by those having the ultimate decision of the matter. And it is, in my esteem, a happy circumstance that I find in the legal adviser of the Government one, who, at the same time, is so well acquainted with the history and constitution of the church in which I am a minister.

I have said nothing of what I consider the cruel personal wrong which is done to me by this order. It can be considered as nothing less than an official endorsement of a letter which appears in the St. Louis Democrat, (newspaper) Dec. 13, 1862, signed by the three individuals to whom Gen. Curtis hands over the church to which I minister, which letter I regard as a most shameless and false assault upon my character, so that if this order is permitted to remain, the whole influence of the Government, to which I have a right to look for protection, sends me out branded with crimes which I contemplate with horror, and which I indignantly deny that I have committed.

The only offence, if offence it be, which malice itself can charge against me, is, that being a minister of the Gospel, I have aimed to stand aloof, not only in public, but in private, from the exciting discussions of these unhappy times, and to devote all my energies to the distinctive duties of my calling. But while this has been the course which I have thought proper and becoming me as a man set apart by the church of God, to deal with men about their highest interests, I have at the same time, not forgotten my duty as a citizen. In a formal paper read before the General Assembly of the Presbyterian church, and which is upon its records, and was published through the country, I declared "that true allegiance and lawful subjection and obedience to the civil Government, as an ordinance of God, are among the highest duties of religion," and more recently still, in the public prints and over my own signature, I declared that "as a citizen, I hold it to be a most important and indispensable part of my duty to God, to obey law, to submit to the authorities, to pray for them, to render them the honors due their several stations, and to promote peace and quietness," and what is more, I have not only taught this in words, but by my example, I have declared the same thing, by the quiet but unhesitating manner in which I have gone forward in the discharge of every civil duty enjoined upon me either by the word of God or by the laws of the land, and especially by voluntarily taking the following oath, enjoined by the State Convention of Missouri, June 10th, 1862, upon those who solemnize the right of matrimony. [Here the oath was inserted.]

But while I feel that it is hard for a cause like this, that I should be driven as a criminal from my home into a climate unfriendly to my impaired health, and among strangers who are by an official paper warned to suspect me, I say, while I feel all this to be a great wrong, I do not come to make any personal plea. If the good of the State requires that a quiet and peaceful family should be banished, that an innocent man should be treated as a criminal, let it be done. The man is not worthy the name of a man who is not willing to suffer even wrongfully for the public good. I come to ask that the church may be left to her liberty, that the military authorities be not permitted to judge and decide between me and the members of my church, upon purely ecclesiastical questions; that they be not permitted to assume authority over the government and worship of the Presbyterian church.

Let this be done and I am prepared to show, by patient endurance, the kind and degree of obedience, which, as a Christian citizen, I am ready to render to the "powers that be."

As for the rest, I shall calmly but confidently leave my character and my innocence to be vindicated by that Divine Providence before whom even a sparrow does not fall unobserved, and who can make all things work together for his people's good.

What is proper to be done in this matter is not for me to decide, but I most earnestly and respectfully request that the subject may receive such attention as is proper.

The only personal request I make is, that if the sentence of banishment is carried out, that I may have sufficient time allowed me to make reasonable preparation for my departure, and that I may be permitted to choose what locality I prefer in "the loyal States," or to go to a foreign country, if I shall so elect.

Very respectfully,

SAMUEL B. MCPHEETERS.

MODIFICATION OF THE ORDER.

OFFICE OF THE PROTEST MARSHAL GEN'L,
DEPARTMENT OF THE MISSOURI,
ST. LOUIS, Mo., Dec. 23, 1862.

Rev. S. B. MCPHEETERS and WIFE:

The order made against you on the 19th of December, is modified until further orders, to this extent: that you are not required to leave the State.

By order of Major General Curtis:

F. A. DICK,
Lieut. Col., Provost Marshal General.

LETTER OF THE PRESIDENT TO GEN. CURTIS.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
WASHINGTON, January 2, 1863.

Major General CURTIS:

MY DEAR SIR: Yours of December 29th by the hand of Mr. Strong is just received. The day I telegraphed you suspending the order in relation to Dr. McPheeters, he with Mr. Bates, the Attorney General, appeared before me and left with me a copy of the order mentioned. The Dr. also showed me the copy of an oath which he said he had taken, which is indeed very strong, and specific. He also verbally assured me that he had constantly prayed in church for the President and Government, as he had always done before the present war. In looking over the recitals in your order, I do not see that this matter of the prayer, as he states it, is negative; nor that any violation of his oath is charged, nor in fact that anything specific is alleged against him. The charges are all general, that he has a rebel wife, and rebel relations, that he sympathizes with rebels, and that he exercises rebel influence.

Now after talking with him, I tell you frankly, I believe he does sympathize with the rebels; but the question remains whether such a man of unquestioned good moral character, who has taken such an oath as he has, and cannot even be charged of violating it, and who can be charged with no other specific act or omission, can with safety to this government be exiled upon the suspicion of his secret sympathies. But I agree that this must be left to you who are on the spot; and if, after all, you think the public good requires his removal, my suspension of the order is withdrawn, only with this qualification, that the time during the suspension is not to be counted against him. I have promised him this.

But I must add that the United States Government must not, as by this order, undertake to run the churches. When an individual, in a church or out of it, becomes dangerous to the public interest, he must be checked; but let the churches, as such, take care of themselves.

It will not do for the United States to appoint Trustees, Supervisors, or other agents for the churches.

Yours very truly,

A. LINCOLN.

P. S.—The committee composed of Messrs. Yeatman and Filley, (Mr. Broadhead not attending,) has presented your letter and the memorial of sundry citizens. On the whole subject embraced, exercise your best judgment, with a sole view to the public interest, and I will not interfere without hearing you.

A. LINCOLN.

LETTER FROM GEN. CURTIS TO DR. M'PHEETERS.

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF THE MISSOURI,
ST. LOUIS, March 28th, 1863.

Rev. S. B. McPHEETERS, St. Louis:

Restraint having been imposed on your exercise of public unctious because of supposed disloyalty, some of your friends have traversed the fact of your being disloyal, and desire my personal intervention. With a view of ascertaining your sentiments, I submit to you the following interrogatories for your answer:

1st, Do you wish the rebellion crushed, and are you in favor of the restoration of the national authority over all our territory?

2d, In the conflict of war now existing do you desire the success of the federal and the defeat of the rebel forces?

I have the honor to be, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. R. CURTIS,
Major General.

These questions, Dr. McPheeters declined to answer for reasons given below:

REPLY OF DR. M'PHEETERS.

ST. LOUIS, March 31, 1863.

To Major General CURTIS,

Commanding the Department of the Missouri:

GENERAL: I have the honor of acknowledging the receipt of your favor of the 28th instant, the Sabbath intervening between its date and reception.

Allow me, General, to express my thanks for the kind manner in which you received and heard certain friends of mine, and for your further kindness in reviewing your decision in my case.

Under other circumstances than those in which I find myself placed, it might be proper and becoming in me to express freely and fully, both my desires and opinions, as far as I have desire or have formed opinions in relation to our sad national calamities; but the position in which my seemingly hard fate has placed me is peculiar and embarrassing, and my answer to your interrogatories must be determined in view of all the circumstances surrounding me and my conviction of duty. I do not mean that I have or that any citizen ought to have any difficulty in acknowledging his allegiance. Certainly no such difficulty is in my way. When in the General Assembly of my church it was charged that I was "disloyal," defining that word according to the standard authorities, I promptly and thoroughly repelled the charge before the whole country; and when the Convention of this State, by ordinance, required a most carefully prepared oath of allegiance to be taken by those who solemnize the rites of matrimony, in obedience to the teachings of my church on that particular matter, (Directory of Worship, chap. xi, §1.) and from a sense of duty, I voluntarily subscribed and filed it, as required. And in this connection allow me to say, that one of the things which I have found it hardest to bear in the course of the authorities toward me, is that I have not only been treated as if I had taken that oath without honor of conscience, but whatever influence my office or character give me, is made to encourage and sustain those who are shaking the very foundation of all society by denying the solemn and binding obligations of an oath. But I forbear. I have said so much as due to myself and to my friends who have interposed in my behalf.

As to the particular interrogatories propounded, they are of the same import as those which certain members of my church and congregation demanded that I should answer. I denied their right to require me to give any answer to such questions, and in doing so used this language: "And this position I take, not from any disposition to stand out capiously upon an abstract question of right, nor from any disposition improperly to conceal my views on political questions, but from a conscientious conviction that I cannot yield the thing you claim without, to the full extent of my example, compromising the rights of every minister, and endangering the peace of all the churches." When I refused to answer the questions of the members of my church, they made appeal to the public, and directly or indirectly to the military authorities; the result was that Military Order No. 152 was made and issued, which, for my silence and refusal to answer these gentlemen, banished me from my pulpit, and, as originally made, from the State. This order is, in express terms on its face, based on my position above quoted, taken with these members of my church.

If I was right then, it cannot now be proper that I should give an answer which I then declined on principle, a principle on the maintenance of which I then and now believe depends in a great degree the peace, the purity and the spiritual power of the church. I do not expect you, General, to see all the consequences of the precedent which my answer to the questions proposed would establish, as I think I see them. But this I think I have a right to expect, that you will see that, believing as I do, I cannot answer the questions which you propound, under the circumstances in which they are propounded, without abandoning my religious convictions and wounding my conscience. I dare not, then, whatever be the consequences to me personally, make such a reply to your letter as you probably expected.

But I trust I have said enough to satisfy you that all charges of disloyalty against me are without foundation. In this connection I may be pardoned for quoting from your "Circular letter" defining loyalty. You say: "Prima facie, an oath of allegiance is evidence of loyalty, and when men have taken upon themselves such obligations, and have lived and acted consistently with them, they should be regarded as loyal." I have taken the oath voluntarily and conscientiously; I have lived in consistency with it; your own words declare the rest, I "should be regarded as loyal." Under your order, and with any construction that can be put upon it, I would be allowed to buy and sell, to practice medicine or to plead law. Why not to preach the gospel?

But I will not weary your patience. I have not believed that in anything that has occurred, you have designed to do me injustice, and I hope that you will see your way clear to remove the hindrances to my returning to my work and calling. In any event I shall try and so live and act, that those who know me will be constrained to confess that I am not a bad, much less a dangerous citizen.

I have the honor to be, General,
Your obedient servant,
SAM'L B. McPHEETERS.

LETTER OF DR. M'PHEETERS TO MAJOR GENERAL SCHOFIELD.

ST. LOUIS, June 2, 1863.

To Major General SCHOFIELD,

Commanding the Department of the Missouri:

GENERAL: The Presbytery of St. Louis, of which I am a member, stands adjourned to meet in this city on to-morrow to hear and consider certain matters in relation to the Church of which I am the pastor. The matters that will be then discussed are of deep personal interest to me. Special Order No. 152, issued on the 19th of December, 1862, prohibits my exercising the functions of my office in the State of Missouri during the present war. One of the functions of my office, as a minister of the Gospel, is to sit in ecclesiastical courts, and my object in addressing you is respectfully to request that under the circumstances which I have stated, you will so far suspend Order No. 152 as not to hold me guilty of its violation if I attend this meeting of my Church court and participate in its deliberations.

I deem it but proper to say that when Presbytery held its meeting in this city on the 15th of last month for the same purpose, that I made a verbal request through Brigadier General Edwards of General Curtis to be allowed to sit in Presbytery without offence to the military authorities, and it was not granted. This I felt to be hard, as my only object in asking a temporary suspension of the order was that I might have an opportunity to defend my ministerial character and conduct before the ecclesiastical court to which I am amenable.

I have the honor to be, General, your obedient servant,
SAMUEL B. McPHEETERS.

REPLY OF GENERAL SCHOFIELD.

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF THE MISSOURI,
ST. LOUIS, June 3, 1863.

Rev. SAMUEL B. McPHEETERS:

SIR: I am directed by the Major General commanding to say that you have permission to attend the meeting of the Presbytery of St. Louis for the purpose of defending your ministerial character, but not to act as a member of such body.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
A. V. COLBURN,
A. A. G.

LETTER OF DR. M'PHEETERS TO GOV. GAMBLE.

ST. LOUIS, December 3, 1863.

To Governor GAMBLE:

DEAR SIR: As your time is necessarily occupied by your official duties, it is with reluctance that I trouble you with any matters relating to myself. I know, too, that the removal of the grievance under which I labor is not immediately in your hands. What I wish to ask of you, however, is only your kind offices in suggesting anything that it may be proper for me to do, and any assistance in the premises which you may be disposed to give me. I flatter myself that my intercourse with you in years past has left the impression on you that I will not knowingly make any statement which I do not myself believe to be true.

My case is this: On the 19th day of December, 1862, a military order was issued containing a three-fold sentence. 1st. Myself and wife were to be banished to specified limits in the Northern States. 2d. While I remained in Missouri I was prohibited the exercise of my functions as a minister of the Gospel. 3d. My Church was taken from the control of its ecclesiastical officers, and given in charge of a commission who are directed to provide a preacher and conduct the services. By a subsequent order, dated December 28, 1862, the sentence of banishment was suspended. By a third order, dated March 4, the control of my Church was returned to the church officers. From these several orders (copies of which I inclose, marked A, B, and C) it will be seen that the only part of the original order against me that remains in force, is that which forbids me the exercise of my distinctive functions as a minister of the Gospel. So true is this, that it is known to the entire community that for nearly a year I have been in the full and uninterrupted enjoyment of every right of a citizen, except my ecclesiastical and religious rights. Refusing to receive a salary from my congregation for services I was prevented from rendering, I have been forced to turn to secular pursuits. For many months past I have found employment in a law office. In this position I have not only prepared, but, in person, presented and passed claims before a commission appointed by the President of the United States. If prepared, I might practice law; if disposed, I might publicly lecture on history, art, or science. I have voted without challenge or objection. In short, there is no secular calling which is not as open to me as to any other citizen, and yet it would be a military offence for me to preach a sermon, to administer the Lord's Supper, to officiate at a funeral, or to sit in an Ecclesiastical Court! The simple naked fact is, that as matters now stand, the military authorities have deposed me from the Gospel Ministry, and this is the only grievance under which I labor and from which I seek to be relieved. I could give a very rational explanation of this strange, not to say absurd issue of my case, but it would require more space than I think proper to occupy. Suffice it to say that it is manifest on the face of the original order that it was no part of the purpose of the military authorities, at the time the order was issued, to prohibit the exercise of my ministerial functions for a longer time than the ten days which were to elapse between the order and the banishment. When the order of banishment was suspended it was so worded, however, as to leave the ecclesiastical sentence in force. And there matters have stood to this time. I think I have a right to assume, if there was any valid ground why I should have been punished, that it would have come to light in a year, and I am confident if there had been any evidence against me I would not have been permitted to remain in the State. The truth is, Governor, that the original sentence was lastly issued upon the representation of one or two misguided and prejudiced men, and was pronounced without my having any examination or trial whatsoever. This I have always regarded as hard treatment. For some months before the order was issued, hearing that charges and insinuations were being made against me privately, I went in person to both the District Provost Marshal and to the Provost Marshal General, and made special request that if charges of any kind were preferred against me that I might have a hearing before sentence was passed. And if this, as it seemed to me, reasonable request had been granted, I firmly believe that no order would ever have been issued. It is most certain that the order of December 19 could not be obtained against me now. I believe that those who asked and procured it then, would not ask it to-day. I am much mistaken if they are glad to-day of what they did a year ago.

I have not, up to this time, presented my case to the General now commanding this Department, nor asked him to review it, mainly for two reasons:

1st. It was a case decided by his predecessor.

2d. Friends in whose judgment I relied, thought that in the condition of things in Missouri, it was better for me patiently to wait. I feel that I have now waited long enough, and I think something should be done in my case. I am the only minister, of any denomination in the city, prohibited by the military authorities from preaching. I appeal to you as one acquainted with this community, and acquainted with me, if such a distinction against me makes the impression upon respectable citizens that this sentence is just and right? The question I wish to submit to you is, what should I do to bring my case before the proper authorities? If the sentence can be removed by a simple reversal, giving no reasons, and going into no explanation, I have no objection. If a trial is necessary, then I ask, as a matter of justice, that it may be full and searching, and that I have a fair opportunity of thoroughly vindicating my character and conduct.

Most respectfully, your obedient servant,

SAM'L B. MCPHEETERS.

LETTER OF PRESIDENT LINCOLN TO O. D. FILLEY.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
WASHINGTON, December 22, 1863.

O. D. FILLEY, Esq., St. Louis, Mo:

I have just looked over a petition signed by some three dozen citizens of St. Louis, and the accompanying letters, one by yourself, one by a Mr. Nathan Ranney, and one by a Mr. John D. Coalter, the whole relating to the Rev. Dr. McPheeters. The petition prays in the name of justice and mercy that I will restore Dr. McPheeters to all his ecclesiastical rights.

This gives no intimation as to what ecclesiastical rights are withheld. Your letter states that Provost-Marshal Dick, about a year ago, ordered the arrest of Dr. McPheeters, Pastor of Pine Street Church, prohibited him from officiating, and placed the management of the affairs of the church out of the control of the chosen Trustees; and near the close you state that a certain course "would insure his release." Mr. Ranney's letter says: "Dr. Samuel B. McPheeters is enjoying all the rights of a civilian, but cannot preach the gospel!!!" Mr. Coalter, in his letter, asks: "Is it not a strange illustration of the condition of things, that the question who shall be allowed to preach in a church in St. Louis shall be decided by the President of the United States?"

Now, all this sounds very strangely; and, withal, a little as if you gentlemen, making the application, do not understand the case alike; one affirming that the doctor is enjoying all the rights of a civilian, and another pointing out to me what will secure his release. On the 2d of January last, I wrote to General Curtis in relation to Mr. Dick's order upon Doctor McPheeters; and, as I suppose the Doctor is enjoying all the rights of a civilian, I only quote that part of my letter which relates to the Church. It was as follows: "But I must add that the United States Government must not, as by this order, undertake to run the churches. When an individual, in the church or out of it, becomes dangerous to the public interest, he must be checked; but the churches, as such, must take care of themselves. It will not do for the United States to appoint Trustees, Supervisors, or other agents for the churches."

This letter going to General Curtis, then in command there, I supposed, of course, it was obeyed, especially as I heard no further complaint from Doctor McPheeters or his friends for nearly an entire year. I have never interfered, nor thought of interfering as to who shall or shall not preach in any church; nor have I knowingly or believingly tolerated any one else to so interfere by my authority. If any one so interfering, by color of my authority, I would like to have it specifically made known to me.

If, after all, what is now sought, is to have me put Doctor M. back over the head of a majority of his own congregation, that, too, will be declined. I will not have control of any church on any side.

Yours respectfully,

A. LINCOLN.

LETTER OF ATTORNEY-GENERAL BATES TO DR. M'PHEETERS.

WASHINGTON, December 31, 1863.

REV. SAMUEL B. MCPHEETERS, D. D., St. Louis, Mo:

REV. AND DEAR SIR: Governor Gamble transmitted to me (in his letter of December 21) your letter to him of Dec. 3, which contains a lucid statement of the condition in which you suppose yourself to be left, by the various military orders, copies of which accompanied your letter.

Before the receipt of Gov. Gamble's letter I had received a petition in your behalf, addressed to the President, by some twenty or more, among whom I recognize some of the worthiest men in St. Louis. That petition, with several letters of individuals, which were sent with it I laid before the President. He seemed much surprised to find that you were still laboring under any clerical or professional disability, in consequence of those ill advised military orders, which, in all their personal and civil bearings had been superseded long ago. And he answered Dr. O. D. Filley (who wrote one of the letters, above referred to) in a manner which he supposed, would end the question. Again, I brought the matter to his notice, by exhibiting the documents first mentioned in this letter. The President, in substance, answered that it was always his wish and purpose to hold individuals responsible for their own acts, without any reference to the fact that they happened to be members or officers of particular churches—that the fact of being a member or pastor of a church was no excuse for personal misdemeanor. But that he never intended to assume or permit his subordinate officers to assume, any power to govern or control the churches, or in any manner to determine who may or who may not preach and minister in them. You say that you are in the full fruition of your civil rights, and the President considers you as free in the enjoyment of your ecclesiastical rights.

I write this with the express permission of the President, and I presume to advise that you quietly resume the exercise of all the rights, duties, and functions of your office, as if no interruption had occurred.

I remain with great respect, your friend and servant,
EDWARD BATES.

THE CHARGE OF THE CHURCH EDIFICE.

Upon the issue of the order of December 19, 1862, the session, (Elders John Whitehill, William T. Wood, Alexander Marshall, David K. Ferguson, and William W. Greene, present, and Martin Simpson, and George P. Strong, and the Pastor, absent.) at its meeting, Dec. 20, 1862, passed these resolutions unanimously:

1. By the standards and Constitution of the Presbyterian Church, the government and discipline of the Church is in the Session of the Church, composed of the Pastor and Elders, chosen and elected by the people; and the Session only has, or can have, the rightful custody and control of the church edifice, and books and papers of the Church.

2. The Constitution of the Church provides for the selection of Pastors and Ministers, and only in the modes provided can a Pastor or Minister be appointed, or elected, for any church or congregation. All power and control in the selection of Pastors and Ministers, is by our Constitution denied to the civil or other government, or other human power outside of the Church.

3. As members of this Session, we are under solemn vows to obey and maintain the Constitution of the Presbyterian Church, and whilst we yield obedience to said military order, and surrender, so far as we have possession and custody, our church edifice, books and papers, to the control of the individuals indicated, to wit: George P. Strong, James M. Corbitt and John M. Ferguson, a sense of duty constrains us to record our convictions, that the necessary effect of the order is to suspend, while the order is in force, organized church action.

4. We earnestly urge and entreat all the members of the Church not to suffer this sore affliction to scatter our little flock, but to maintain steadfastly their present relations with Pine Street Church, and in faith and trust and Christian patience, await the return of the day when in God's providence, the possession and control of our church edifice, and the government and discipline of the Church, shall be restored to us, to be used and exercised in accordance with the Constitution and Standards of the Presbyterian Church.

5. We know not on what evidence the military authority acted, as their order affects our Pastor, the Rev. Samuel B. McPheeters, and intend no impeachment of their action; but adhering to our Pastor as we do, and as our solemn vows require of us, a sense of duty impels us to bear our testimony to his rare talents and efficiency as a minister, and to his faithfulness as a Pastor. We have been on terms of most familiar intercourse with him. We believe more than four-fifths of the church and congregation would unite with us in this utterance. We commend him to the sympathy and affection of God's people, wherever he may go or sojourn in his involuntary wanderings from the people of his charge, whom he so much loves.

6. We have no purpose in these resolutions to criticise the order of the military, referred to; our only aim has been to declare our views of our powers and duty as a church session in the circumstances that surround us.

REVOCATION OF THE ORDER.

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF THE MISSOURI,
OFFICE OF THE PROVOST MARSHAL GEN'L,
ST. LOUIS, March 4, 1863.

Special Order No. 25.

Special Order No. 152, paragraph II, of date of 19th December, 1862, relating to the Pine Street Presbyterian Church, is hereby further modified as follows:

It appearing that Messrs. Strong, Corbitt, and Ferguson have not taken charge of the church edifice, books and papers, so much of said order as directed them so to do is now rescinded.

By command of Maj. Gen. S. R. Curtis,

F. A. DICK,
Lt. Col. and Provost Marshal General.

The case of Dr. McPheeters was before the last General Assembly of the (Old School) Presbyterian Church, on an appeal. A body claiming to be the Presbytery of St. Louis dissolved the pastoral relation between Dr. McPheeters and the Pine Street congregation, and on his resuming service, requested him to desist. The Assembly refused to sustain the complaint of Dr. McPheeters, 47 voting to sustain, 2 to sustain in part, 117 not to sustain, and 1 excused from voting.

THE ANDERSON CASE.

COURT MARTIAL AND SENTENCE OF S. J. P. ANDERSON, D. D.

Before a military commission which convened at St. Louis, Missouri, pursuant to Special Orders No. 97, series of 1863, from Headquarters St. Louis District, and of which Colonel John F. Tyler, 1st regiment of Infantry, M. S. M., is President, was arraigned and tried Rev. S. J. P. Anderson, citizen of St. Louis, Missouri, on the following charge and specifications:

Charge.—Disloyalty to the Federal Government.

First Specification.—Uttering disloyal expressions, and expressions of hostility to the Government of the United States, and manifesting sympathy with rebels and their cause. In that, he has asserted and maintained, avowed and admitted, that rebellion is not a sin; that the South is right; that the war against the rebellion is wrong and unwarrantable; that the South is justified in its course, and that it cannot be subdued by Federal arms; using, also, other language and expressions of similar import and tendency.

Second Specification.—In that he has openly justified the attack on and capture of Fort Sumter, in April, 1861, and at sundry times prior to June 1, 1863.

Third Specification.—In that he did, at his residence at St. Louis, display, or permit to be displayed from his house, the rebel colors, and erect, or permitted to be erected, or to be continued on his premises, a mound or miniature fort or fortification designated as "Fort Sumter," and bearing the rebel flag a considerable time in the spring of 1861.

Fourth Specification.—In that he denounced the capture of Camp Jackson by the Federal forces as a violent outrage on the sovereignty of the State.

Fifth Specification.—Having openly approved of the firing on United States soldiers in the streets of St. Louis on or about the 11th and 13th days of May, 1861, and denounced these soldiers as "home butchers," "murderers," and words of like import.

Sixth Specification.—Evinced pleasure and gratification in rebel successes and Federal reverses, thus signifying his approval of the rebellion.

Seventh Specification.—Openly stating and avowing that the war against the rebels is wrong and unwarrantable, and that he could not pray for its success on the national fast day of September 30, 1861.

Eighth Specification.—At a meeting of several clergymen, held in the city of St. Louis, to concert a union of their several churches in the observance of a national fast day, appointed by the President of the United States for the 20th day of September, 1861, he conditioned his joining in such observance on this, that the success of the Federal arms should not be prayed for, and he refused to join in such observance of a fast day because his conditions were rejected.

Ninth Specification.—That on and after a meeting of the Church Extension Board of the so-called Old School Presbyterian Church in the city of St. Louis, in conversation, argued and spoke in favor of the rebel cause, and against the efforts of the Government of the United States to put down the rebellion, averring that the South was in the right, and could not and ought not to be conquered.

Tenth Specification.—That, as a clergyman and a pastor, he has openly cast his influence in favor of the rebellion, and against the Government of the United States, by his public and private conduct, language and demeanor, in this wise—that he has avowed the South to be right, and the Government of the United States to be wrong, in the present conflict, and that rebellion is not a sin; that it could not be put down by the Government of the United States; that it ought to succeed and would succeed; and that loyalty had nothing to do with the qualification for membership in the church, Synod, and other religious bodies.

Eleventh Specification.—In that he had arms concealed in his house for the purpose of resisting the Federal troops known as Home Guards, and which were designated by him as "Dutch rule," and also saying that he would use these arms if his liberties were attempted to be interfered with by them, and using words of like import, intimating that he intended resistance to military law.

The Commission, after mature deliberation and reflection, have found the prisoner guilty of all the above specifications, and also the charge, and have therefore sentenced him to be sent south of the lines of the Federal army at as early a day as practicable.

The proceedings have been disapproved by the Commanding General, on account of a defect in the orders convening the Commission. The number of members in this case was reduced below the minimum prescribed in paragraph 2, in General Orders No. 1, series of 1862, from these headquarters.

The proceedings are therefore inoperative and void.

ORDER RESPECTING RELIGIOUS CONVOCATIONS.

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF THE MISSOURI,
ST. LOUIS, MO., March 5, 1864.

COLONEL: In the opinion of the General Commanding, the interests of the country require that due protection should be given within the limits of this department to religious convocations, and other religious assemblages of persons whose function it is to teach religion and morality to the people. But at the present time he deems it expedient that the members of such assemblages should be required to give satisfactory evidence of their loyalty to the Government of the United States as a condition precedent to such privilege of assemblage and protection.

The Major General Commanding desires that you take such steps as in your judgment will best secure these objects.

I am, Colonel, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
O. D. GREEN.

Assistant Adjutant General.

To Col. J. P. SANDERSON, Provost Marshal General, Department of Missouri.

EXPLANATORY LETTER FROM GEN. ROSECRANS.

HEADQUARTERS DEP'T OF THE MISSOURI,
ST. LOUIS, MO., April 29, 1864.

DEAR SIR: Assured by your letter of the 25th that the members of the Presbytery, which were to have met at Booneville, are loyal, I am quite satisfied that nothing but a proper understanding of the origin and purposes of the order is necessary to cause it to meet their hearty approval.

My respect for your body, and for the principles of religious freedom, require that I should give an explanation to you and the religious public.

Loyal church members, both lay and clerical, called my attention to the fact that many assemblages of ministers and teachers of religion of various denominations were to convene during the spring and summer, in which would doubtless be many persons openly and avowedly hostile to the National and State Governments; that in one most of them would be open enemies to the Union. They also prayed me to take such measures as that those assemblages should not be used to concoct treason or injure the national cause.

What was to be done? If all who claim to meet for religious purposes can do so without question, a convocation from Price's army, under the garb of religion, may assemble with impunity and plot treason in our midst.

If, on the contrary, religious assemblies, really such, are scrutinized with the same freedom as political meetings of unknown and doubtful character, not only would it be necessary to inquire into the ministerial character of its members, but their public and private proceedings must be so watched that treason could not be perpetrated without detection and punishment, which would occasion a most irksome interference with personal privacy and the freedom of religious action.

As the General commanding this department, my duty to the country and the people of the State required me to protect them from the machinations of enemies, who, under the cover of the freedom of religion, should attempt to conceal plans and counsels opposed to the interests, peace, and safety of the State and the nation, while, as a Christian, I felt bound to secure religion from the danger and disgrace of being used as the cloak of malice, and its freedom from a surveillance freely exercised over political meetings.

To fulfil these duties the Provost Marshal General was instructed as follows: [See order above.]

Upon these instructions the Provost Marshal General issued the orders to which your letter alludes.

In that order, as now enforced, he protects those meetings, and dispenses with surveillance of the members or proceedings, on the simple and easy conditions that the members will, individually, assure him of their loyalty in either one of the following ways:

First. By certifying on honor that they have sworn to support the Constitution and Government of the United States, and provisional government of this State, as required by the laws thereof, to enable ministers to solemnize marriage, each at the time and place set opposite to his name. Or, Second. By taking an oath of the form prescribed in that order.

I am quite sure that, upon proper understanding and reflection, the friends of religion and its freedom will thank me as much as do the friends of the Union for this order.

I regret to say that, while I have abundant evidence of their satisfaction, I know of very few who have complained of it who have been remarkable for loyalty. Most of them have been remarkable for their sympathy with the rebellion, and now live in our midst croaking, fault-finding, and even rejoicing in the nation's struggles and reverses, like the impious son of Noah, who uncovered and mocked at the nakedness of his father.

It is very easy to see that such persons injure the cause of religious freedom, as they do that of the country.

From what has been said, it is manifest that the order, while providing against public danger, protects the freedom and purity of religion, on the one hand, from disgraceful complicity with treason, and, on the other, from an irksome surveillance, which would otherwise become necessary in time of public danger.

W. S. ROSECRANS,

Major General.

To the Rev. J. B. FINLEY, Stated Clerk, Westchester College, Fulton, Missouri.

THE DEPARTMENT OF MISSISSIPPI.

1864, June 18—Col. B. G. FARRAR, commanding at Natchez, issued this order:

ORDER OF COL. B. G. FARRAR.

HEADQUARTERS U. S. FORCES,
NATCHEZ, MISS., June 18, 1864.

[SPECIAL ORDER, No. 31.]

Extract.

II. The Colonel commanding this district having been officially notified that the pastors of many churches in this city neglect to make any public recognition of allegiance under which they live, and to which they are indebted for protection, and further, that the regular form of prayer for "the President of the United States, and all others in authority," prescribed by the ritual in some churches, and by established custom in others, has been omitted in the stated services of churches of all denominations, it is hereby Ordered, That hereafter, the ministers of such churches as may have the prescribed form of prayer for the President of the United States, shall be read at each and every service in which it is required by the rubrics—and that those of other denominations, which have no such form—shall on like occasions pronounce a prayer appropriate to the time, and expressive of a proper spirit toward the Chief Magistrate of the United States. Any minister failing to comply with these orders, will be immediately prohibited from exercising the functions of his office in this city—and render himself liable to be sent beyond the lines of the United States forces—at the discretion of the Colonel commanding.

The Provost Marshal is charged with the execution of this order. By command of

B. G. FARRAR,

Colonel Commanding.

JAMES E. MONTGOMERY,

Capt. and Asst. Adj. Gen.

PROTEST OF THE BISHOP OF NATCHEZ.

To Col. B. G. FARRAR, Commanding at Natchez:

RESPECTED SIR: Returning to Natchez from a portion of my visitation, I have had communicated to me your Special Order No. 31, dated June 18th, requiring all pastors of churches to make public recognition of their allegiance to the government under which they live, and to which they are indebted for protection; to pronounce a prayer appropriate to the times, and expressive of a proper spirit towards the Chief Magistrate of the United States. I have had some personal interviews with you in reference to this Order, and so has the Vicar General, Very Rev'd M. Grignon. We both take the occasion to express our thanks for the politeness we have experienced from you on all these occasions.

Indeed, the intercourse of our clergy with the Commanders at Natchez, and the officers associated with them, has been generally agreeable, and we all offer our thanks. I must mention in particular Major General Crocker, for one conspicuous act of his, directing the entire restoration of the fence around our cemetery when it had been destroyed. Our orphans, likewise, have experienced their goodness in receiving supplies from the Commissary stores. It is true that the presence of the army was the very cause of their needing this assistance, because it closed the ordinary channels of their resources; but this does not cancel our obligations of gratitude toward the Commanders here, and the administration at Washington, for thus alleviating the miseries of war towards those helpless children, and the good sisters and others who have kindly come here to take care of them. Their prayers are offered up every night for all their benefactors.

With regard to the subject of this Special Order, I have to state, that the prayers prescribed by our rulers are in the book called the "Roman Missal," and among them there is none that mentions, especially, any civil government. The prayers contained in our various English prayer books are commonly approved of by individual bishops, simply as containing nothing contrary to the teachings of the Church, but they are not part of our prescribed religious service.

In the Catholic Cathedral of Natchez, as I have informed you, every morning we recite in English the Litany of the Saints, wherein we make express supplication for all Christian rulers, for peace and unity among all Christian people, and for eternal good things to our benefactors; among whom, certainly, are to be chiefly reckoned those to whom we are indebted for protection.

Those prayers appear to you to be not sufficient to satisfy the requisitions of this Special Order.

I have further informed you that a somewhat similar order, or request, was made once before by the military Commander at Natchez, that I then referred the matter to higher authority, that the answer given was: That we should not be further molested on the subject, and that, in fact, we were not molested again during the two months which elapsed before the publication of the present Order. I have also told you why the correspondence was not made public.

Having this decision from higher authority, it appears to me that the matter is not exactly open for discussion in Natchez. The evidence I have given of such a decision having been rendered, (though not official,) gives at least a sufficient ground for suspension of any action under the Order, until the same higher authority can be heard from, and its instruction can be received in official form.

My respect, however, for the post you occupy, and your personal claims to my regard, make it agreeable to me to give you all reasonable satisfaction, not by discussing the question, but my making known to you the reasons, and the spirit which actuate me in declining to comply.

I shall beglad, also, if you suffer this letter to be published, to have my neighbors round me, soldiers and civilians, and most of all the flock under my care, to whom I am bound to render good examples—I shall be glad to have them understand the true spirit and motives of my conduct. The more so, because false impressions have prevailed in consequence of false reports having been circulated—some of them intended to be complimentary, concerning my language and conduct on the former occasion, above referred to. I take this opportunity of making it known, whether it be accounted to my credit or my discredit, simply as a fact, that I did not on that occasion use any words of boldness, but I endeavored simply to express, in as pleasant terms as I could command, the reasons why I ought not to be expected to comply.

And I now expressly declare that my declining to submit to this Order is not intended as an expression of disregard, or as dislike, towards any civil or military authority, nor towards any person exercising such authority. It is not intended as a manifestation of disloyalty, nor of loyalty, nor of any person claiming power. It has no political signification. It is simply of the Liberty of the Church to discharge her divine functions, without interference from other persons.

And this, in a country where all religions are equal before the government, amounts to the same thing as the liberty of the people, (not against God, but against the State,) in peace and in war, to choose for themselves their religion, and their religious guides.

If an order like this were made by any other civil or military authority that might be in command at Natchez, it would be my duty to resist then as I resist now.

The chief reasons for resistance may be reduced to these two. One is, that religious worship ought to be directed exclusively by religious authorities. I speak not of the negative right of other powers to suppress acts of intended and unwarranted insult, of which there is no question here, but of the positive ordering of prayers, sermons, ceremonies, &c.

The other reason especially to the present case is, that Divine Worship being directed to God, it is not proper to introduce anything into it for the purpose of exhibiting our sentiments on temporal matters. This appears to be addressing our devotions to men instead of God.

But as the weight of these two principles depends, with most persons, on the political consequences and collateral bearings of a departure from them, I beg you to have patience if I judge that the interests intrusted to me by God, which are involved in this question, require of me a somewhat lengthy development.

It is to be observed that loyalty or disloyalty are, in truth, personal sentiments. Strictly speaking, they do not belong to aggregate bodies, but to the individuals who constitute the bodies; and a recognition of allegiance uttered by a priest in the presence of the congregation, would not imply any profession made by one individual, which was of no force whatever as regarded any other individual. And why—out of a whole community should one single person be required to make such profession? and the very person, who by his office and his conduct, has the least of all to do with civil, military, or political affairs—the priest.

If it should ever be charged that I, or any priest of the diocese, had in his conduct departed from his office, and done anything injurious to the government, let the charge be stated and examined, let the individual be held responsible for his own conduct like any other citizen, and let not God's solemn worship be altered or interfered with on one man's account.

Catholic Faith teaches that God appointed the Church to direct men in the manner of worshipping Him—to tell them when, and how, they ought to offer their public devotions—what outward forms and ceremonies are suitable and what prayers, and forms of prayer, are appropriate on public occasions. Whether others regard this as true or false it is the doctrine of the Church, received from God, like the doctrine of the Incarnation, or any other dogma. It is essential to her existence; to renounce it would be to declare herself an impostor. For a Bishop to abandon it would be to betray the solemn trust confided to him by God—to sacrifice the eternal interests of the souls under his care, and to scandalize the whole Catholic Church throughout the world.

Now, any acceptance on my part of this "Special Order" would be, in my judgment, equivalent to abandoning this doctrine, by acknowledging the right of others than the Church to take share in the direction of Divine Worship.

This Order requires us to introduce a totally new element into our Sacred Worship, viz: the public profession of temporal allegiance to the constituted authorities by a prayer to be pronounced professedly for this end.

I have no hesitation to express, not in words only, but in the sincerity of my mind, all respect for his Excellency, the President of the United States, and to profess cheerful obedience to his government in all things lawful while I live under it and enjoy its protection; and this without any questioning as to his personal merits, simply because he is the Chief Magistrate, and my religion teaches me to respect all who are in authority, because authority is from God. Whether the possessor of it be designated by election or any other means, whatever legitimate authority he possesses, it is from God who gives it to him, and my respect for all those who hold authority is a part of my respect for God, and a part of my religion. The same I say of all civil governments in the world.

But the designating of an individual by his name, or by a special title, is not a part of my worship of God. And though if it would assist to excite devotion, it might be done innocently, and even laudably, when there would be no danger of its being misunderstood; yet to do it, not for exciting feelings of devotion, but avowedly for the purpose of making profession of allegiance, and when it would be understood as acknowledging a right on the part of the secular powers, civil or military, to interfere in the arrangement of religious worship—this would, to my mind, be a criminal betrayal of my sacred trust, and a deep injury to the Church, in which alone are my hopes of eternal salvation.

Further, this Order asserts the right of requiring us if necessary, to compose entirely new prayers, appropriate to the times, and "expressive of a proper spirit towards the Chief Magistrate of the United States."

This necessarily implies a right in the Commander to judge what times, and what emergencies are worthy of new and appropriate prayers, and what spirit our prayers must be expressive of; and consequently, a right to inspect our prayers, and to make such alterations as he judges necessary to render them appropriate and sufficiently expressive. This is no extravagant conclusion of mind. You are in this very case claiming to exercise this right; for I have told you that we are reciting prayers which I, as Bishop, judge to be appropriate, and expressive of the proper spirit towards our rulers.

You, as military Commander, judge that they do not answer the purpose, and you require me to recite new ones, or to add to these in such a way that they may meet your judgment.

I gladly bear testimony that I see in you no desire to embarrass us; on the contrary, you are disposed to be as forbearing as possible, consistently with your claim.

You would be satisfied with very little—a few words—perhaps a single word—but you insist upon that word. Why is so much importance attached to the utterance of a word? Manifestly, because you feel as I do, that the utterance of that word would be the acknowledgement of a principle. That principle would be, that our Divine Worship is a proper occasion for professions of allegiance, and that the military Commander has a right to require the recital of prayers which he judges appropriate to the times, and expressive of the proper spirit.

This right once admitted in a military Commander, he will himself be the judge of when and how to exercise it. Your good will and moderation will be no rule for another, whether at Natchez or elsewhere. The few words which will satisfy you may appear to him to be an evasion, and if he thinks they are, it will be his duty to require more. Now, if other events arise which he judges of sufficient importance to require new prayers appropriate to the new times, it will be his duty to demand them. There will be still more reason for exercising this right, with regard to our sermons and instructions than with regard to our prayers; and there is nothing to hinder him from applying it, likewise, to our ceremonies.

And there have been already indications of a disposition to extend this interference to the pulpit and the ceremonies. I have heard of the clergy being called on to publish from the pulpit the proclamation of the civil power. Happily the Commander was a gentleman of clear mind, and moderation, and he acquiesced in the reply made to him, that the pulpit was not the organ of communication between the civil powers and the people. But, if he possessed the right which this Special Order implies, he might equally have refused to acquiesce, and have insisted upon the reading of that, or any other civil or military document, which he should judge it suitable to have communicated through the pulpit.

And with regard to the ceremonies, I have been told that some papers were hinting, if not openly declaring, that various clergymen, in different churches, ought to be made to suffer for not celebrating certain feasts and fasts appointed by the Government, or rather, for not holding their Divine Service at the hours, and with the degree of solemnity, which the editor judged suitable.

Progress is very rapid in this country, especially in time of war, and what is thrown out to-day as a hint by a single paper, may in a few months become a common clamor, and an established rule.

And observe that this right of interference with the Church's worship of God, would be exercised in this country by men who acknowledge no responsibility to her rule, and profess no acquaintance with her laws and liturgy.

This consideration is a general answer to all such arguments as might be drawn from any practices in Catholic countries, practices, not imposed by military authority, but dictated by the Church itself, of her own accord, and guarded against danger of abuse by her enactments—enactments which the civil authority engages to enforce.

Still more, a right of this kind can be as sternly claimed, and as rigorously enforced by one military authority as by another. The priests in other parts of this diocese (which comprises the entire State of Mississippi,) or myself, while discharging my Episcopal visitation in those parts, could equally be called on to invoke God's assistance for the enemies of the United States.

And now, in simple, honest truth, what would such contradictory prayers be worth? and what would either or both powers have gained when they had extorted a public pronouncing of them? As prayers to God, they would be a mockery, and as professions of allegiance, I repeat it, they are no part of Catholic worship, and I cannot consent to introduce them into it. The entire freedom of the Church to direct her own Divine worship is not, I believe, a peculiar claim of the Catholic Church. If I am rightly informed, nearly all denominations have likewise claimed it, whether all of them have exercised it at all times or not. It has always been the boast of some of the New England Colonies, that they were founded by men who left their homes rather than brook the interference of the State with their manner of worshipping God; and if some of them are charged with afterwards persecuting men for conscience's sake, even then, it has been said, it was not an exercise of the State's authority over the Church, but rather the Church was directing the State to drive out what the Church believed to be false worship.

And this liberty of the Church to direct Divine worship has always been recognized by the State. I need not quote to you the well known clause of the Constitution of the United States, prohibiting Congress from any interference with the free exercise of religious worship.

The illustrious General Jackson, when President of the United States, determined as he was in the exercise of his authority to its fullest extent, said he had no constitutional power even to invite the people to observe an annual Thanksgiving day. He was to administer the civil government, and to take no cognizance of the religion of the people, except so far as to protect each one in following his own, without molestation from his neighbors.

If later Presidents, exercising their own judgment in the matter, have thought it well on especial emergencies, as in time of pestilence and of war, to call on all the people to offer prayers on certain days, yet, as far as I know, they have confined themselves to a simple invitation, and not pretended to compel any one to comply.

Nor is there any reason in the circumstances, why such a power should be claimed at this particular time. These prayers are no necessity of war—no armies would be strengthened or supplied, no enemy would be weakened or embarrassed, no friends would be encouraged, no opponent would be disheartened.

On the contrary, the effect would be to give pain and alarm to many, and, most of all, to those who have most warmly espoused the cause of the Union, believing that it was the best protection of their religious liberty; for, to a true Christian, who has any faith and manliness in him, the dearest of all liberties must be that of the exercise of his religion. Country, Constitution, Union, Independence, Flag, however warm sentiments any of these may awaken in his heart, after all, they express in themselves but temporal goods. The real value of these things is the protection and security they afford him while he is working out the great end of his creation, the service of God, and the saving of his immortal soul. "What will it profit him to gain the whole world, if he lose his own soul?" And what must he care for the power and glory of his country, if purchased at the sacrifice of the means given him to save his soul?

And among those means, in the opinion of most of Christians, and in the absolute conviction, the Divine faith of every Catholic, most conspicuous and efficient is the Church, in the free exercise of all the duties imposed on her by God.

If the country claims a right to interfere with her religious worship, it puts a shackle on her freedom, which every earnest Catholic will feel as a deep wrong and a more grievous injury than iron manacles upon his wrists. It would be felt as an injury by numbers of persons in all the walks of life, whose past and present services to the United States, rendered in various ways, do not deserve an injury at the hands of Government.

I say this, not as a ground for claiming any privilege, nor any exemption from just and reasonable laws, but that you may better understand how wisely extended and how deeply unmerited would be the injustice of any interference with our religious worship. Allow me to mention, not in any vain parade, but for the better understanding of the bearing of this question, the Sisters of Charity, of Mercy, of the Holy Cross, and all the other orders of religious ladies, who have been for three years wearing out their willing lives in the military hospitals—ladies from Mississippi, Louisiana, and South Carolina, by the side of ladies from Massachusetts and Illinois—who have saved so many lives, and comforted so many deaths. That pleasant smile of theirs, that cheery word, which lifts up the heart of a poor, suffering soldier, and gives him more strength than medicines or food; it reaches his heart, because it comes from theirs; and what smile can their hearts give, when they know that those very soldiers, whose lives they are saving, may be employed to close their churches, and to conduct their bishops and priests beyond the lines, because they will not acknowledge the right of the civil government to alter their religious worship?

And, in truth, what is it that makes such women? that infuses into their hearts that heroic charity, and that religious tenderness? It is the very freedom which the Church enjoys to train her children with such devotions and religious practices as she judges to be most beneficial to their souls, according to their circumstances and their states of life, without interference from any human power.

Once make the Church a subject of the State in spiritual functions, and she is no longer a living Church of the Holy Ghost, infusing into her children the life of Catholic charity; she becomes a kind of pious branch of police.

And we, the Catholic clergy of this Diocese of Natchez, have done nothing to merit molestation from the United States Government. We have never lent our public advocacy nor our private influence to its injury, neither before nor since the war began. I have never preached a political sermon, and never advised any one, neither in public nor in private, neither directly nor indirectly, to join any army, nor to give a vote for or against any of the measures which led to the present war; and, to the best of my knowledge, all the priests of the Diocese have likewise kept themselves free from political entanglements. Not that we had not the right, like other citizens, to take an active part in politics if we chose, but, having dedicated ourselves primarily to the care of souls, we endeavored to follow the line of conduct recommended to the clergy by all the bishops of this province, in the Council of New Orleans, held in January, 1856, in these words of their pastoral letter: "It is hardly necessary for us to remind you that you are to confine yourself to the spiritual guardianship of your respective flocks, and within the line of your ecclesiastical duties. Leave to the politicians the politics of the day. Your business is the salvation of souls and the interests of Jesus Christ." We have tried accordingly to keep ourselves free to render religious services to all who might desire them, whether permanent members of our flocks, those neighbors among whom we have been living, and to whom we are attached by natural as well as by religious ties, or whether temporary sojourners, soldiers, or civilians, masters and servants, white and colored—all who have immortal souls have had equal claim upon our time and care when they desired our religious services.

I shall conclude by mentioning facts, not for the purpose of courting favor, but to let you understand the spirit which the Church has given to priests, without making professions of allegiance a portion of her religious worship, and that you may judge whether the Government would gain anything of substantial good by interfering with the Church's own way of teaching her children their duties to their fellow-men.

One of the priests of this Diocese, one whom I most esteemed and loved among them all, sacrificed his life for the soldiers of the United States Army, in February of 1863. It was the Rev. Basil Elia. He asked my permission to go to the soldiers at Young's Point, and in that neighborhood, opposite to Vicksburg, because he had heard that many were dying there without a priest. His own statement was that a hundred Catholics were dying in a week. It was outside of my Diocese, and I had use for his services at home; yet I approved of his going, for the same reason he asked to go, simply because there were so many there who wanted his assistance. His incessant fatigues and exposure soon brought the prevailing disease on himself. He could not be induced to abandon those poor souls until he was entirely prostrated. He was carried to Memphis in March, and he died there, the 2d of April.

Another priest, now at the Cathedral, is just recovering his strength after four months of sickness, brought on him in spite of a robust constitution, by his attention to the sick, chiefly those dying of the smallpox, almost all of them being either United States soldiers or poor colored people, gathered at Natchez, on account of its occupation by the United States army.

Indeed, ever since the beginning of last August, the chief portion of the labors of the Catholic clergy of Natchez have been absorbed by them. For myself, though my episcopal duties have been urgently demanding my attention, yet I have devoted much more time and labor to the United States soldiers and the colored people, during the last ten months, than I ever gave to any sick before, during all the eighteen years of my sacred ministry.

And there is a collateral point, which, perhaps, it would be more dignified to leave unnoticed; but, in this country, it will be regarded as necessary for a just appreciation. The labors of our priests have been rendered without any chaplain's salaries, or any other temporal remuneration. When we were obliged to keep three horses instead of one, the commanders rendered us some assistance in that regard; but even that only multiplied our expenses, by the necessity of providing for them.

Simply from a sense of religious duty, and in accordance with the spirit of the Church, we have labored along; with the blessing of God we shall continue to labor, if you will suffer us to do so without renouncing the Divine obligations of the Church, from which alone our labors derive their value.

But if you demand of us, in the name of the civil or military government, to alter our religious worship, the care of which is intrusted by God to the Church alone, our line of conduct is simply and clearly marked out by the Divine Author of both Church and State, and with the assistance of His Grace, we hope to adhere to it. "Render to Cesar the things that are Cesar's, and to God the things that are God's."

I have the honor to remain, respected Sir, with all consideration, your obedient servant,

Wm. Henry Elder,
Bishop of Natchez.

St. Mary's Cathedral, Natchez, July 13, 1864.

July 22—Brigadier General Mason Brayman issued this order:

HEADQUARTERS UNITED STATES FORCES,
Natchez, Miss., July 22, 1864.

[SPECIAL ORDER No. II.]

Extract.

V.—It appears that while the country was at peace William Henry Elder, Bishop of Natchez, caused to be read as a portion of the proper and recognized religious service of the Roman Catholic Church within his ecclesiastical jurisdiction, the usual prayer for the President of the United States, &c., whereby was signified and taught a true and loyal spirit towards the Government and authorities of the United States, and a pious desire for the prosperity and maintenance thereof.

It further appears, that after the establishment of the pretended Government of the "Confederate" States of America, in violation of the Constitution and laws of the United States, and in treasonable and armed rebellion against the same, the said William Henry Elder, Bishop of Natchez, did cause to be abolished and stricken from the proper and usual service of the Roman Catholic Church, within his ecclesiastical jurisdiction, the prayer for the President of the United States, &c., and did substitute and cause to be read in place thereof a like prayer for the President of the pretended "Confederate" States, &c., whereby he publicly renounced his allegiance to the Government of the United States, and declared allegiance to a power then in armed resistance against the same, and compassing its overthrow: such act being in violation of his duty as a citizen of the United States, and of evil example to them under his ecclesiastical authority, he well knowing that thereby was instigated and promoted rebellion and armed hostility against the lawful authority of the United States.

It furthermore appears, that on the 18th of June ultimo, a Special Order (No. 31) was issued by the officer then commanding the United States forces at Natchez, requiring that the prayer for the President of the United States, &c., should be restored and appropriately read as part of Divine Service, (as had been the custom aforesaid in the Roman Catholic Church at Natchez.)

The said William Henry Elder, Bishop of Natchez, being still in rebellion against the United States, and ill disposed towards the government thereof—not having repented of nor retracted his treasonable conduct and teachings as aforesaid, but on the contrary repudiating and denying the authority of the Government and its officers in that behalf; and having for a long time, though frequently warned, contumaciously refused, and still utterly refusing obedience to said order, thus encouraging the people under his authority in treasonable practices, and impairing the force of discipline! It is therefore ordered:

First. That the said William Henry Elder, Bishop of Natchez, be expelled from the lines of the Army of the United States, not to return without permission, on pain of imprisonment, during the continuance of the rebellion.

Second. That the Provost Marshal close, and hold military possession of, St. Mary's Cathedral, situated in the city of Natchez, and all other houses or places of worship within this command, and under the ecclesiastical jurisdiction of the said Bishop William H. Elder, in which the prayer for the President of the United States has heretofore been, but is not now, read.

Inasmuch, however, as the said William Henry Elder, has requested in a respectful manner, that any action under said order No. 31, be suspended "until communication can be had with the authorities at Washington:" It is further ordered:

That action under said order No. 31, and the paragraphs "First" and "Second" of this order be accordingly suspended until further orders; and that, in the meantime, the Provost Marshal at Natchez, cause the said William H. Elder, Bishop of Natchez, to report in person, within twenty-four (24) hours after receiving a copy of this order, to the officer commanding the U. S. forces at Vidalia, and remain within his military lines under penalty of the immediate execution of the order before named.

The Provost Marshal at Natchez and Vidalia, respectively, will see to the strict observance of this order.

By order of Brig. Gen. M. Brayman:

J. H. ODLIN,
Captain and Asst Adjutant General.

August 12—Gen. Brayman issued the following:

HEADQUARTERS UNITED STATES FORCES,
Natchez, Miss., August 12, 1864.

[SPECIAL ORDER No. 31.]

Military authority having been for the time vindicated, so much of Special Order No. 11 as requires Rev. William Henry Elder, Bishop of Natchez, to remain within the military lines of the post of Vidalia, (La.) is suspended, and he may return to his home and duties until the pleasure of the War Department be known in his case.

And as all solemn appeals to the Supreme Being, not proceeding from honest hearts and willing minds, are necessarily offensive to Him, and subversive of sound morality, so much of Special Order No. 31, June 18, 1864, as requires public prayer to be pronounced in behalf of the President of the United States and the Union is suspended until further orders; leaving all persons conducting divine worship at liberty to manifest such measure of hostility as they may feel against the Government and Union of these States, and their sympathy with the rebellion, by omitting such supplication, if so minded.

By order of Brig. Gen. M. Brayman:

J. H. ODLIN,
Assistant Adjutant General.

The case, on reaching Washington, was referred to Major General Canby, Commanding Department, by whom no further action appears to have been taken.

THE DEPARTMENT OF THE GULF.

ORDERS OF MAJOR GENERAL BUTLER.

NEW ORLEANS, May 13, 1862.

[GENERAL ORDER No. 27.]

It having come to the knowledge of the commanding general that Friday next is observed as a day of fasting and prayer, in obedience to some supposed proclamation of one Jefferson Davis, in the several churches of this city, it is ordered that no such observance be had.

Churches and religious houses are to be kept open as in time of profound peace, but no religious exercises are to be had upon the supposed authority above mentioned.

By command of Major General Butler.

OFFICE MILITARY COMMANDANT NEW ORLEANS,
CITY HALL, May 23, 1862.

[GENERAL ORDERS.]

Hereafter, in the churches in the city of New Orleans, prayer will not be offered up for the destruction of the Union or Constitution of the United States, for the success of rebel armies, for the Confederate States, so-called, or any officers of the same, civil or military, in their official capacity.

While protection will be afforded to all churches, religious houses and establishments, and religious services are to be held as in time of profound peace, this protection will not be allowed to be perverted to the upholding of treason; or advocacy of it in any form. Where thus perverted, it will be withdrawn.

G. F. SHEPLEY, Military Commandant.

Rev. Drs. Leacock and Goodrich, and Mr. Fulton, of the Episcopal churches, declined to read the prayer for the President of the United States; and they were sent to New York by the next steamer. Some weeks after, they returned to New Orleans, but, Gen. Banks requiring the oath of allegiance as a condition of landing, they returned to New York.

DEPARTMENT OF THE TENNESSEE.

ORDERS OF MILITARY GOVERNOR ANDREW JOHNSON.

STATE OF TENNESSEE, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
NASHVILLE, June 28, 1862.

Lieut.-Col. R. W. McClain, Acting Provost Marshal:

SIR: Rev. Drs. Howell, Ford, Schon, Sawrie, and Baldwin are under arrest, and they are hereby placed in your custody.

Should they desire to give evidence of their loyalty by taking the oath of allegiance and giving their individual bonds in the sum of $5,000 each for the faithful observance thereof, they will be permitted to do so, and their release ordered accordingly.

If, however, it is their determination not to give such evidence of loyalty, they will be committed to prison, there to remain until arrangements are completed for their transportation South, beyond the Federal lines, there to be left, with the distinct understanding that if they recross or come again within said lines during the existing rebellion, they will be considered spies and dealt with accordingly.

Very respectfully,

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT, June 28, 1862.

Lieut.-Col. McClain, Acting Provost Marshal:

SIR: I have to request that you will issue stringent orders prohibiting all visitors to the members of the clergy this day sent as prisoners to the penitentiary, except such as have special permission from me for that purpose; and I would add, this privilege should be granted only for good and sufficient reasons. I would suggest that no encouragement should be given to that secession spirit and feeling which are manifested by numerous offerings of delicacies, &c., by sympathizing rebel friends.

These men were not sent to the penitentiary there to be kept as objects of special attention from traitors, nor to be lionized by a class of people, who, if properly dealt with, would be allowed the privilege of expressing their sympathy only within the same place of confinement.

They are there as enemies of our Government, and as such are entitled and should receive such consideration only as attaches to a person guilty of so infamous a crime.

Very respectfully,

ANDREW JOHNSON, Military Governor.

On the 29th of June Rev. C. D. Elliott and Dr. Cheatham were arrested and sent to the penitentiary. All of these ministers, except Dr. Howell, were subsequently sent through the lines.

THE DEPARTMENT OF VIRGINIA.

ORDER OF BRIG. GEN. WILD, AT NORFOLK.

NORFOLK, Va., Feb. 11, 1864.

[GENERAL ORDERS No. 3.]

All places of public worship in Norfolk and Portsmouth are hereby placed under the control of the provost marshals of Norfolk and Portsmouth respectively, who shall see the pulpits properly filled by displacing, when necessary, the present incumbents, and substituting men of known loyalty and the same sectarian denomination, either military or civil, subject to the approval of the commanding general. They shall see that all churches are open freely to all officers and soldiers, white or colored, at the usual hour of worship, and at other times, if desired; and they shall see that no insult or indignity be offered to them, either by word, look, or gesture on the part of the congregation. The necessary expenses will be levied as far as possible, in accordance with the previous usages or regulations of each congregation respectively.

No property shall be removed, either public or private, without permission from these headquarters.

By command of Brigadier General E. A. Wild.

CASE OF REV. JAMES D. ARMSTRONG.

WAR DEPARTMENT, BUREAU OF MILITARY JUSTICE,
April 30, 1864.

To Hon. E. M. STANTON, Secretary of War:

In the case of Rev. James D. Armstrong, of Norfolk, Va., I have the honor to submit the following report:

This person having been placed at hard labor on the public works by Major General Butler, in March last, as a punishment for his disloyalty, an appeal in his behalf by his sister, residing in Orange Co., New York, was addressed to the Secretary, and the case thereupon, at the suggestion of this office, referred to General Butler for report.

From this report of the 9th inst., it appears that Armstrong, who has been for some years a Presbyterian clergyman at Norfolk, took and subscribed about February last, the oath of allegiance to the United States which is published in General Order No. 49, of Headquarters of Department of Virginia and North Carolina, December 10, 1863; in which he "solemnly swore, in the presence of Almighty God," as follows: "That he would 'henceforth faithfully support, protect and defend the Constitution of the United States, and the Union of the States thereunder;' that he would 'abide by and faithfully support all acts of Congress passed during the existing rebellion with reference to slaves;' also, 'all proclamations of the President of the United States made during the rebellion, having reference to slaves.'"

And further, he gave his "solemn parole of honor (to be enforced according to military law)" that he would "hold no correspondence with or afford any aid or comfort to any enemies or opposers of the United States, save as an act of humanity."

And he further "solemnly declared that this oath and parole were taken and given fully and willingly, and with out any mental reservation or evasion whatever, and with full intention to keep the same."

It being suspected however, that he had practically violated this oath, &c., and was a disloyal and dangerous person, Armstrong was summoned before an aide-de-camp of the General commanding, and subsequently before the General himself, and subjected to an examination in regard to his feelings, sympathies and actions as a man of professed loyalty.

From his answers to the questions addressed to him, it fully appears as follows: That he took the oath in accordance with the Scriptural injunction to obey the "powers that be," and with the intention of keeping it as far as his actions were concerned; but that at the same time he could not control his feelings.

That when a friend of his, in coming out of the Custom House at Norfolk, after both had taken the oath together, exclaimed that he "would like to spit upon the Northern Yankees," he did not rebuke him, because he considered that he took the oath "with the same view as himself."

That his sympathies have always been with the rebels. That he thinks the South entirely justified in beginning and continuing the war; and believes that the Confederacy should be recognized as an independent Government.

That he does not regard Jefferson Davis and his associates as traitors, or as deserving any punishment.

That he believes that human slavery is sanctioned by the Bible.

That he has never opened his church on the days of fast or thanksgiving appointed by the President, but has opened it for meetings of prayer on days designated by Davis, of the so-called Southern Confederacy; that he has determined never to pray that the President or the military, &c., authorities may be successful in putting an end to the rebellion; that since the war he has never preached a sermon in his church favorable to the Union cause; and that he would never allow any other minister to pray there for the Union and against the rebels; but that he has himself prayed for "the authorities over us," meaning the President of the United States, &c.

That he did not regret the federal loss at Smithfield a few weeks since.

From these admissions, which constitute the only evidence presented, it would appear that Armstrong, except in the case of calling prayer meetings in his church in obedience to the requirements of the rebel Davis, has not committed what are commonly regarded overt acts of positive disloyalty, but has violated his oath rather in sentiment and feeling than in the open expression, by language or deed, of hostility to our Government. There is, however, doubtless enough in these admissions to convict the party before a military tribunal of a technical violation of his oath, and probably other testimony could be procured which would present his guilt in a still more decided form. As to his perfidy and bitter disloyalty there can be no question.

In regard to Maj. Gen. Butler's manner of treatment in this case, it is to be said, that while a temporary confinement of a suspected party, preparatory to his being brought to trial, or for other necessary purpose, is customary and allowable, there is believed to be no precedent in our service for the imposition by a commanding general of a formal punishment, and especially (as in the present case) of an infamous punishment, without any trial whatever. The military law, in providing a just and summary mode of trial, also provides for the proper punishment of all military offences, and the case must be extremely rare in which this law cannot be more properly appealed to for the infliction of such punishment than the will of the general commanding.

It is advised, therefore, that Armstrong either be brought to trial by military commission for a violation of his oath and parole of honor, or sent beyond our lines as a dangerous character. General Butler represents that his society and influence were more prejudicial to the interests of the United States in his neighborhood than a company of rebel cavalry would have been; and his banishment to the enemy's country would be, not a punishment, but a measure of police regulation sanctioned by the exigencies of war, and most proper to be employed in the present instance.

J. HOLT,
Judge Advocate General.

Proposed Action in Congress.

First Session, Thirty-eighth Congress.

1864, March 31—Mr. POWELL offered this resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to transmit to the Senate all orders that have been issued from his department, or by generals of the army of the United States, authorizing any person or persons to take possession of any church or churches, or house dedicated to the worship of God, or house or property belonging to any home or foreign mission society, or houses and property belonging to any denomination of Christians in the United States; and that he inform the Senate how many churches and how much property, and of what kind and description, has been taken possession of in pursuance of said orders, and where the same is situated, and to what denomination of Christians the property so taken belonged.

April 5—The resolution was tabled—yeas 27, nays 11, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Clark, Collamer, Conness, Dixon, Doolittle, Fessenden, Foot, Grimes, Hale, Harding, Harlan, Harris, Howard, Howe, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, Morgan, Morrill, Ramsey, Sherman, Sprague, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, Wade, Wilson—27.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Carlile, Cowan, Davis, Johnson, Pomeroy, Powell, Riddle, Saulsbury, Van Winkle, Willey—16.

July 1—Mr. POWELL introduced this bill, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

Be it enacted, &c., That it shall not be lawful for the Secretary of War, or any other person who, for the time being, may be acting as Secretary of War, or any officer of the army of the United States, or other person engaged in the military service of the United States, to take charge of any church or house of public worship, in any State or Territory of the United States, with a view of dismissing a minister therefrom, or of appointing a minister thereto, or installing a minister therein; and that it shall not be lawful for the Secretary of War, or any person for the time being who may be acting as Secretary of War, or any officer of the army of the United States, by proclamation, order, or otherwise, to appoint or designate any person or persons to take charge of any church or house of public worship for the purposes aforesaid. And the Secretary of War, or any person who for the time being may be acting as Secretary of War, or any officer of the army of the United States, or other person engaged in the military service of the United States, who violates this act, shall, for every such offence, be liable to indictment as for a misdemeanor, in any court of the United States having jurisdiction to hear, try, and determine cases of misdemeanor; and on conviction thereof shall pay a fine not exceeding ten thousand dollars, and suffer imprisonment in the penitentiary not more than ten years at the discretion of the court trying the same. And any person convicted as aforesaid shall moreover be disqualified from holding any office of honor, profit, or trust under the Government of the United States.

Reconstruction of Churches. CHURCHES IN NEW ORLEANS.

THE EPISCOPAL CHURCHES.

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF THE GULF,
OFFICE OF PROVOST MARSHAL GENERAL,
NEW ORLEANS, June 3, 1864.

To the Wardens and Vestrymen of St. Peter's Church:

By orders of the Major General commanding, you will please furnish me as follows:

- 1st. List of Wardens, Vestrymen, and Trustees, with date and mode of appointment, and present residence.
- 2d. List of pew-holders, and others who have contributed steadily to the support of the Church, the rector, or the officiating minister, with the amounts contributed by each, and sums yet due; and the names of such other heads of families, or other adults, who by their stated attendance may have been regarded as members of the congregation during the period aforesaid, with their places of residence.
- 3d. An account in detail of all financial transactions, and the present pecuniary condition of the corporation, with an inventory of church buildings and their valuation.

Very respectfully,

JAMES BOWEN, Brig. Gen.,
Provost Marshal General, Department of the Gulf.

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF THE GULF,
OFFICE OF PROVOST MARSHAL GENERAL,
NEW ORLEANS, June 15, 1864.

Major GEORGE B. DRAKE, A. A. General:

In compliance with orders from Department Headquarters, I respectfully report that the Episcopal Churches in which the prayers for the President and Congress were not read prior to 1st March, were, viz:

St. Paul's,
St. Peter's,
Trinity.

On the 1st March, after due notice, I appointed the following Trustees in St. Peter's Church, in place of the Wardens and Vestrymen:

Wm. Lewis,
John Brooks,
James Jackson,
Henry Houlgrone,
John Houlgrone.

By consent of the Post Chaplain, and with my approval, the Rev. Mr. A. Vallas was authorized to act as the officiating clergyman. On the 9th April the Rev. Mr. L. T. Jessup, clergyman of Trinity Church resigned, and the Rev. Mr. Vallas succeeded him. In both of the churches the prayers for the President and for Congress are read. The Rev. Mr. Vallas officiates in one in the morning and the other in the evening.

The prayers for the President and for Congress were omitted in the services of St. Paul's Church till the 10th of April. Since that date they have been read regularly by the officiating clergyman, the Rev. Mr. Guion.

I respectfully submit the papers of the Wardens of St. Paul's and St. Peter's Churches, and the letters of the Rev.

Mr. Vallas in respect to the financial condition of these Churches.

I was informed by the Rev. Dr. Newman, that at a small Episcopal Church in Algiers, conducted by an alien clergyman, the prayers for the President and for Congress were not read, and I directed the church to be closed.

This is the only Episcopal church in New Orleans, or in its vicinity, in which the above-mentioned prayers are not read.

I am, Major, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JAMES BOWEN, Brig. Gen.

Provost Marshal General, Department of the Gulf.

PRESBYTERIAN CHURCHES.

To Brigadier General JAMES BOWEN, Provost Marshal General, Department of the Gulf:

We, the undersigned, a Committee appointed by you to "ascertain and report the names of the trustees of the several Presbyterian and Baptist churches in this city, Algiers, and Carrollton, and whether the trustees of these churches have taken the oath of allegiance to the United States," &c., do respectfully report:

That in accordance with said order, your Committee proceeded to the performance of their duties, the result of which is presented in a tabular form hereto annexed, to which they refer for the particulars connected with said investigation as it respects the officers of said churches, their present residence, their status as to loyalty, oath, &c. That in the investigation which has been made by your Committee, commencing with the First Presbyterian Church, they report that this church was originally incorporated March 1, 1834, under the corporate name of the "Presbyterian Church of the City and Parish of New Orleans;" that on the 25th of February, 1854, an amendment of said act was passed, in which amended act the title of said church was changed to the "First Presbyterian Church and Congregation of the City and Parish of New Orleans," that in said act the second section thereof reads as follows:

"That said corporation shall have power to elect from their own body, who own or rent pews in said church, trustees to represent them in their temporal affairs or concerns, and that the said trustees shall consist of five, and shall have power to make and establish, from time to time, such by-laws and regulations as they shall judge proper for the election of their own officers, and for supplying the vacancies which may occur among the same, for regulating the time and places of meeting of said trustees or members composing said corporation, &c., and for the government and management of the temporal affairs of said corporation, and generally for the transaction of all the temporal concerns of said corporation of every kind: Provided, that such by-laws and regulations are not inconsistent with the Constitution and Laws of the United States, or with those of this State, or with the provisions of this act; and provided, also, that no sale or other alienation of any of the property of said corporation, except the pews of the church, shall be valid and legal, without the written concurrence and consent of all the then ruling elders of the said First Presbyterian Church.

"Sec. 3. That the said church shall be governed in its ecclesiastical affairs by the doctrine, discipline, rules, and regulations of the Presbyterian Church of the United States, known and designated as the Old School Presbyterian Church, the General Assembly of which held its last annual session in the City of Philadelphia and State of Pennsylvania."

That the Rev. B. M. Palmer, of South Carolina, was installed as the pastor of this church sometime in the year 1856, and continued so to act until some time in the year 1861, when he, together with a large number of the members and congregation of said church, left for the Confederacy, and have not since returned; that the relation of said pastor with said church has never been dissolved; that the said Palmer, as late as about the month of May last, attended a meeting of the so-called "General Assembly of the Confederate States," as the representative of said church; that he, together with six out of eight of the ruling elders of said church are "rebels," in the largest sense of that word; that of said elders there is only one reliable Union man, to wit: J. A. Mablin; that of the five trustees, one has resigned; one is said to have acted with the Confederate authorities in their action against northern men; that the remaining trustees, though having taken the oath of allegiance to the United States, covertly act with the enemies of that Government.

The pecuniary condition of the church is as follows:

There is a mortgage debt against the church of $10,000, which is held by the French house of Rochereau & Co., of this city; the interest for the past three years is also due and unpaid. The church property is insured for the sum of $70,000.

Your Committee further report, that the Third Presbyterian Church was incorporated and chartered in the year 1847 or 1848; that your Committee have been unable to obtain the precise date of said charter; that the said charter contains the same provisions in relation to officers, organization and government as that of the First Presbyterian Church; that in regard to said officers and their present position, &c., your Committee refer to the tabular statement hereto annexed.

This church is encumbered with a debt of $10,000, secured by mortgage in favor of the house of Rochereau & Co., above referred to; that there is also a debt of $2,000, due to the Citizen's Bank of this city, secured, as your Committee believe, by a mortgage; that there is also a debt of $1,000, due to a loyal lady named Miss Clark, a resident of New York city; that the said debts, with the interest thereon, amount to about $15,000, most of which is due to disloyal foreigners and citizens.

Your Committee further report that the Fourth Presbyterian Church is an incorporated body under a charter similar in all respects to that of the churches above mentioned. Your Committee have been unable to ascertain the indebtedness of this church, but they are informed that there is a debt existing against it in favor of the same parties who hold the large incumbrances on the other churches above mentioned.

Your Committee further report, that the church known as the Prytania Street Presbyterian Church, in all respects in the particulars above specified, is similarly situated as the other churches mentioned in this report.

Each of these churches, through its officers and a large majority of its members, identified themselves with the existing rebellion, attempting a disavowal from that loyal body of men known as the "General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church," who, at its session in 1861, so nobly and patriotically sustained our glorious Government and its authority; that shortly after that time these churches connected themselves with what has been called the "General Assembly of the Confederate States," a body without any right for its establishment or continuance, or the recognition, if any, of any competent authority, having the power so to do; that since the occupation of the city of New Orleans by the United States Government, these churches, through some chicanery and secret action, have each constituted themselves into an independent Presbyterian Church, thus attempting to carry out the false principle of secession, and contrary to the charter under which they are severally organized.

Your Committee would also state that these Churches, except the one known as the Second Presbyterian Church, so far as their pulpit supply is concerned, are virtually vacant—that is, they have no regular or stated pastor; that they sometimes have services, conducted by laymen; that there are many members of said churches of undoubted loyalty, who strongly suspect most, if not all, the church officers, who yet remain in this city and have not departed for the Confederacy and elsewhere, of strong sympathies for the rebellion, which has produced so much terrible suffering and devastation throughout our land; that these loyal Presbyterians do not feel at home among these churches, and have often been insulted for their loyalty; that these loyal people are anxious to open these churches to ministers of approved loyalty; that applications have been made to some of the disloyal and unworthy officers now connected with said churches by loyal ministers of the Presbyterian Church to allow them to officiate in their churches, and have been refused.

Your Committee further report that these churches, since their organization, have been connected with and represented in the General Assembly named in their respective charters, until just prior to the breaking out of the said rebellion, when, without the consent or authority of said Assembly, they disavowed themselves therefrom by illegal and unauthorized proceedings on their part; that the said "General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church of the United States of America," as the highest judicatory of said Church, under the 5th article of chapter 12 of the Form of Government of said Church, has the power "of re-proving, warning, or bearing testimony against error in doctrine or immorality in practice in any church, presbytery, or synod; of superintending the concerns of the whole Church," &c., of which powers, your Committee believe, they have never been deprived by any action of said churches, and are amply sufficient to enable the said Assembly, at the proper time and through the proper representation, to deal with the recalcitrant members of their body and correct the evils which have existed, and at present exist, but that it is necessary for some other authority to take present action with strong hand in aid of loyalty, so that the necessary proceedings may be initiated by which said Assembly may obtain such information as will enable it to act upon the powers inherent therein, a portion of which are above specified.

Your Committee would also refer to the annexed order of the War Department in relation to the action of the military officers of this and other departments concerning the churches of the Presbyterian denomination, which is believed by your Committee will authorize them to accomplish the result herein proposed, to wit: the immediate occupation of these churches by the persons specified in said order, or any others duly authorized by said General Assembly, through whom these churches may be re-organized by loyal officers, members, and congregations, and thus bring about that consummation so devoutly to be wished, viz: a resumption of the proper and legitimate authority of said denomination, and thereby work a wholesome influence in favor of the noblest Government ever devised by man

All which is respectfully submitted.

ROBERT H. SHANNON,
CHARLES STRONG,

NEW ORLEANS, August 7, 1864. Committee.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
ASSISTANT ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE,
WASHINGTON, March 10, 1864.

To the Generals commanding the Military Division of the Mississippi and the Departments of the Gulf, of the South, and of Virginia and North Carolina, and all Generals and officers commanding armies, detachments, and posts, and all officers in the service of the United States in the above mentioned Departments. The Board of Domestic Missions of the Presbyterian Church, and the Presbyterian Committee of Home Missions, enjoy the entire confidence of this Department, and no doubt is entertained that all ministers who may be appointed by them will be entirely loyal.

You are expected to permit such ministers of the gospel, bearing a commission of the "Board of Domestic Missions, or of the Presbyterian Committee of Home Missions" of the Presbyterian Church, who may convince you that their commissions are genuine, to exercise the functions of their office within your command, and to give them all the aid, countenance and support which may be practicable, and in your judgment proper, in the execution of their important mission.

By order of the Secretary of War.

E. D. TOWNSEND,
Assistant Adjutant General.

CHURCHES IN EAST TENNESSEE.

On the 2d of September, 1864, a meeting of the Union Presbytery was held in Knox county, attended by three ministers and the lay representatives of twelve congregations, and it was unanimously resolved to dissolve their connection with the "United Synod of the Presbyterian Church," a pro-slavery denomination which originated, in 1857, by secession from the New School Presbyterians, and to reconnect themselves with the New School Presbyterian General Assembly. This Presbytery embraces about 30 churches with 2,400 communicants, of which 20 are in the counties of Blount, Knox, and Jefferson. The majority of the ministers of the Presbytery had, in 1857, effected an ecclesiastical secession without consulting the congregations, and all of them who had advocated church secession, with but one exception, plunged into rebellion. In May, 1863, the disloyal majority, at a meeting of the Presbytery, passed a resolution, neither to license, nor to ordain, nor to receive from another Presbytery, any man not sympathizing with the rebel Confederacy, or opposed to slaveholding. There were then only four Union and loyal ministers belonging to the Presbytery, all of whom were absent from the meeting, and two of whom soon after died. The two others, together with one who has recanted his rebel sentiments, were the ministers present at this year's meeting of the Presbytery. Two new clerical members were added to the Presbytery, one by ordination, and the other on letter of dismission from a Congregational Association in Michigan.

At a convention of loyal ministers and laymen of the Holston Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, held at Knoxville on August 17, 1864, it was resolved that the loyal members of the Conference have a just claim to all the church property; that they really constitute the Southern Methodist Church within the bounds of the Holston Conference; that they propose, at the earliest day practicable, to transfer the same to the Methodist Episcopal Church in the United States; and that the ministers be instructed to propose to their congregations to go en masse to the Methodist Episcopal Church in the United States. There are in the bounds of the Holston Conference one hundred and twenty preachers known to be loyal, and forty others supposed to be true to the Union; and it is thought, therefore, that the work of reconstruction will be easily accomplished.

The Cumberland Presbyterians of the rebellious States, though very numerous, have never succeeded in effecting a separate church organization. The delegates from East Tennessee, at the General Assembly of the present year, voted with the majority for resolutions demanding the cessation of slavery in both Church and State.

WESLEYAN METHODIST.

GENERAL CONFERENCE OF THE WESLEYAN METHODIST CONNECTION, 1864.

June 1—The body met at Adrian, Michigan.

June 4—The Report of the Committee on the State of the Country, Revs. W. H. Brewster and A. Crooks, and E. Starbuck, layman, was adopted, as follows:

Meeting as we do, a national body, at a time when a civil war of unequal magnitude, and fraught with consequences, not only to this nation, but the world, without a parallel, is raging; when the telegraphic wires stretching through this vast republic seem so many nerves of sensation uniting us with the fields of conflict where the nation's life seems to depend upon success, or defeat, we should be justly charged with indifference—with want of patriotism, did we give no expression of views and feelings upon the subject.

We desire humbly and gratefully to confess that, as a nation, we are in the hands of a merciful and just God, who is dealing with us in the way of judgment for our sins, tempered with mercy, extorting from the nation the confession, "How unsearchable are his judgments and his ways past finding out."

He who does not see that God is dealing with this nation, is blind indeed. So striking are the evidences of the Divine hand—so has God conducted us and overruled the plans and purposes of men, bringing about results we all desired but which we should have failed to achieve had our wish for success in the earlier struggles been realized, that in our reverses, not less than in our victories, we recognize the unsearchable wisdom, justice and goodness of God. His justice afflicts us, that we may humble ourselves and repent of our sins, and be willing to surrender the hateful cause of this rebellion, while his mercy spares us, that we may yet be a people to his praise.

We rejoice, that contrary to the wishes of the President—in spite of political parties—in spite of the influence of the border States, the war has become a war for freedom on the one hand, and for the establishment of slavery on the other; and before the nations of the earth, and before God we are obliged to accept this issue. We bow with adoring wonder before the sublimity and grandeur of the onward sweep of Divine Providence in the events now transpiring among us.

We recognize with gratitude to Almighty God the remarkable change of national sentiment upon the subject of slavery, and the rights of colored persons. "It is the Lord's doings and marvelous in our eyes," and one of those results reconciling us to the sacrifices of life, and the other evils incident to this war. Every blow struck by the Union army, is a blow for liberty, every victory over the rebels, is a victory in behalf of liberty; and the advance of our army, is the onward march of freedom into the heart of despotism, and our success is a triumph in behalf of liberty for all races of men.

Resolved,—That the war being a judgment of God upon the nation for national sins, pride, infidelity, and oppression, the only way to permanent peace and prosperity, is through national repentance.

Resolved,—That we accept civil war in the course of Divine Providence as a result of national crimes, while its horrors of bloodshed and savage cruelty have deepened our purpose to labor and pray for that period when the nations of the earth shall learn war no more.

Resolved,—That in the spirit of patriots and christians, we affirm for ourselves and our churches, our unqualified loyalty to the Government, and our readiness to endure and make all the sacrifices necessary to the overthrow of the rebellion, and the destruction of slavery, its guilty cause.

W. H. BREWSTER,
ADAM CROOKS,
EDWARD STARBUCK,
Committee.

Rev. J. Watson, voting against, in brief remarks stated that he was opposed to war at any time.

June 7—The Report of the Committee to draft an address to the President of the United States—Revs. W. H. Brewster, Henry Norton, and W. W. Lyle, and Joseph Parrish, and C. G. Case, laymen—was adopted as follows:

ADRIAN COLLEGE, ADRIAN, MICH., June 6, 1864.
To His Excellency ABRAHAM LINCOLN, President of the United States:

The General Conference of the Wesleyan Methodist Connection of America, convened at Adrian, Michigan, in its Quadrennial Assembly deems it fit and proper in its associated capacity, to extend to you its christian greeting.

And first of all, as an assembly of christian ministers and laymen, we desire to say to you as the Chief Magistrate of the Nation, "May grace, mercy, and peace from God our Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ rest upon you." In common with all the truly loyal of our citizens we have felt the deepest interest in the great struggle now going on to maintain the integrity of the nation, and to protect and perpetuate those institutions of freedom so dear to every American heart, and which have been threatened by the wicked rebellion which now rages. And we have not ceased to pray that God, in his adorable Providence, would not only incline the hearts of his people to true repentance on account of our national sins, and especially of the great sin of the nation, human bondage; but that He would graciously vouchsafe to our army and navy such victories over armed traitors as that this most wicked and causeless of rebellions might be speedily crushed, and the nation be restored to peace and tranquillity. Aside from the general principles of loyalty and genuine patriotism, there are very special reasons why we, as a connection of christian churches, should be more than ordinarily interested in our country's severe struggle for the maintenance of righteous government.

Taking as one of the cardinal truths of christianity, that God hath made of one blood all nations of men that dwell on the face of the earth, and being convinced that it was a duty we owed to God and humanity to protest by word and deed against the fearful crime of American slavery, which was sanctioned and protected by the leading christian denominations of the land!

The denomination which we represent, and which is known as the "Wesleyan Methodist Connection of America," organized twenty-one years ago. Holding with a firm grasp the doctrines of grace taught by the Methodist Episcopal Church, from which we seceded on account of her then notoriously pro-slavery principles and practice. We differed from the church of our early choice only on matters of ecclesiastical polity, and the great distinctive principle of holding no fellowship with the slaveholder, his aider, or apologist.

During these twenty-one years no slaveholder, nor sympathizer with slavery, has ever been received into the membership of our churches, and since this wicked rebellion has raged, a single disloyal Wesleyan Methodist has been unknown throughout our entire connection.

We have watched with anxious solicitude and prayerful interest the course which you, as the Chief Executive of the nation, have pursued in these days of commotion and bloodshed. And realizing the unspeakable importance of the issues at stake, and the difficulties by which your administration has been surrounded, and the conflicting elements that have conspired to trammel or thwart some of the most obviously correct, and, as the results show, the wisest and most successful measures you have from time to time adopted to crush the rebellion; we have not withheld from you our heartfelt sympathy, nor ceased to pray that God would vouchsafe to you the guidance of Divine wisdom, the gracious care of His Almighty arm, and the comforts of His grace.

We would not conceal the fact that we have not been always free from anxiety, and even fear regarding some of the measures adopted by your administration; neither can we refrain from frankly stating that we have often felt grieved and disappointed at the apparent reluctance exhibited in adopting such measures as would ere now have struck a fatal blow at the very heart of the rebellion. We believe that righteousness exalteth a nation, but sin is not only the reproach of any people, but must, sooner or later, result in the withdrawal of the Divine blessing. The crying sin of slavery has been at once our national reproach and the cause of our national troubles; and, aside entirely from any political or military necessity, it ought to have been destroyed as a moral duty, and as one of the evidences of a genuine national repentance, without which we have no claims on the Divine mercy. We would by no means forget or ignore the advanced, and we would add, noble position you occupy on this all important question, though we thus speak.

We thank you for your effect of emancipation. We thank you in the name of that God who has revealed himself as the friend, and protector, and avenger of the poor and needy. We thank you in the name of the millions of the oppressed of our land. We thank you in the name of universal humanity, and we only regret that that document, noble as it is, is too partial and discriminating in favor of those States, and parts of States not in open rebellion, but whose treason against God's moral government only the more clearly shows that their treasonable proclivities are but scarcely concealed; and their protestations of loyalty are but for the basest and most selfish of purposes.

That you, Sir, may be guided by more than human wisdom in your onerous and responsible position, and that every spiritual and temporal blessing may be yours, that our noble soldiers and sailors, so heroically and nobly fighting the battles of liberty may be abundantly successful, and that that day may speedily dawn when the bow of peace shall again be seen in our heavens, and we be a united and happy people, with the dear old flag waving over a redeemed and regenerated nation, is our earnest and devout prayer.

With feelings of the highest esteem and regard, tendered you by this Conference, the undersigned are authorized in its behalf to sign and forward to you this epistle.

Respectfully, &c., LUTHER LEE, President.
JOHN MCLENDOWNEY, Secretary.

Same day.—The report of the committee to draft an Address to the Churches—Luther Lee, D. D., Revs. W. W. Crane and M. Q. McFarland—was adopted, as follows:

To the members of the Wesleyan Methodist Connection of America, the General Conference in session at Adrian, Michigan, June, 1864, sendeth greeting: Grace and peace be multiplied unto you, through the knowledge of God the Father, and our Lord Jesus Christ, in the comfort of the Holy Spirit. It gives us great pleasure to be able to assure you that our coming together has been in peace, and that we have been much refreshed in meeting once more as your representatives, to take each other by the hand of christian fellowship, and to look upon each others' faces once more in the flesh, many of us having long been endeared to each other, in common with you, by common labors, sacrifices, and sufferings in the cause of God and humanity.

The times are portentous, and wrath has fallen upon our beloved country, fearful in extent, though it be less than our national sins deserve.

The fearful evil of slavery, which our nation so long cherished in its bosom, has at last stung it like a viper, and convulsed our whole commonwealth. This evil has culminated in rebellion and war, which has filled our land with weeping and sorrow for the thousands slain. But amid the evils that oppress us, our confidence remains unshaken in the Providence of God, as all-wise, gracious, and efficient; and we exhort you all to maintain the same confidence, as we trust you have done, and will continue to do. It is no doubt a consolation to you, as it is to us, to know that we foresaw these evils as the probable retribution for the national sin of slavery, and faithfully warned our fellow-citizens of the same, and did what we could to remove the evil and avert the gathering storm; but our words were not heeded, only so far as to be requited with opposition, slander, hatred, and persecution; yet all we suffered is now more than compensated in knowing that we did our duty in the premises; that as a denomination we never had a slaveholder in our communion, and never disgraced the religion we profess by giving its sanction in any form or degree to the crime of human bondage, and never opposed those who opposed slavery. It gives us great satisfaction to know that on the breaking out of the pro-slavery rebellion, the position we had occupied for twenty years is the one the government and the nation has been compelled to assume, so that when they wheeled to face the foe we found ourselves already in line, without having to right about face.

We exhort you, brethren, still to adhere to the great principles of freedom and human right that gave us existence as a religious organization, and to remain true to your God and your country; and be sure to maintain constant and earnest prayer to God that He will render the war the instrument of the entire removal of slavery, and give it a speedy termination in the triumph of the authority of the government over rebellion, and in the return of peace and prosperity to our suffering country. We have great confidence in God, that he will in his Providence make an end of slavery by the means of the war, and bring our nation through the dreadful trial, purified and redeemed from the reign of oppression.

The war has very materially impeded our religious progress, it having made large drafts upon our membership, and even taken numbers of our ministers for the defence of our common country against the most wicked rebellion and war that ever disgraced humanity. The excitement which has pervaded the public mind has also diverted attention from the subject of religion, and tended to render the moral power of the ministry and churches unavailing for the promotion of revivals; yet we have reason to thank God and take courage in view of the progress that has been made. We have been favored with many gracious revivals, which have resulted in the enlargement of some of the churches and in the organization of new ones, and in the erection of new houses of worship. Our progress, if not rapid, has been steadily onward, and we have been strengthened in all the elements that give efficiency to our connection; and we are most happy to be able to state that since our last quadrennial gathering, we have been blessed with greater internal peace and harmony than has marked any former period of our history. We cannot forbear to congratulate you in regard to two achievements of the last four years.

5. The missionary cause is the last object we will name as presenting special claims to your benevolence. This is very important in our circumstances, as we have many feeble churches, who must receive help from stronger churches, or soon be erased from our records.

This aid can be most effectually rendered through a well devised home missionary system, into which we exhort all the churches to enter with zeal and large benevolence.

There is yet another field of missionary enterprise, calling loudly for our most enlarged christian benevolence. It is the freedmen of the southern States. These victims of oppression are now being thrown upon their own resources by the convulsions of the war, and demand aid, which they must have or suffer, if not perish. Voluntary emancipation upon the soil by slaveholders, would have been attended by far less evil consequences, as then the resources of the country would not have been impeded, and they would have found employment in the fields of their former bondage. But the war has desolated the country, consumed its supplies of food and clothing, while the slaves have broken away and rushed by thousands to our lines for protection, in the most destitute and pitiable condition. We may suppose that Government is now doing what it can to elevate their condition, but that is not sufficient to meet their circumstances; they need not only food and clothing, but advice, instruction, schools, and the gospel in its purity, which they have never had. It will require years of benevolent effort to elevate this degraded people, after so many generations of dark bondage, and it is a work which must be done, not by Government but by religious communities, and while others enter into it with zeal, let us not be found wanting.

And now, brethren, remember that we have a great work to do, and that time is short. Years rush along, and hasten us all onward to our final account. Up, then, and be at the appropriate work of life, which is not to hoard up a little of this world for others to quarrel over when we are gone, but to do good, to bless mankind, to spread the gospel of salvation, to glorify God here in our bodies and our spirits, which are his, and to win a throne and a crown of glory in immortality. Remember that it is in this life that eternal destinies are settled; it is on the moral battle-fields of earth that immortal crowns, and thorns, and kingdoms are won. The day of judgment will declare our destiny, and mete out our reward; but here amid the activities of life, we determine for ourselves what they shall be. May the God of all truth and grace administer unto you abundantly the aid and consolation of the Holy Spirit, and fill you with zeal, and love, and power to do His will, and make you perfect in Christ Jesus, to whom, with the Father and the Holy Ghost, be ascribed everlasting praises. Amen.

Committee.

The Wesleyan Church has always been anti-slavery, in its organic law. At its Quadrennial Convention of 1860, an address to the churches was adopted, in which this language is used concerning their "testimonies:"

Slavery, that great crime against humanity and sin against God, has always been, and is universally prohibited. All slave-buying and slave-holding, all apology for either, and all political support of slavery, are made criminal offences.

In the Report on Reforms, then made by Revs. D. Worth and H. Norton, and M. Merrick, layman, this language is used:

Resolved, That this General Conference regards slavery with the most inexpressible loathing and detestation. We regard it as a system of unparalleled wickedness and infamy, whose component parts are theft, adultery, piracy, man-stealing and murder; and whose atrocious character was well defined by the great and good John Wesley, when he pronounced American slavery as the vilest that ever saw the sun. We believe that its utter extinction should be sought by every friend of God and humanity, by all the means which God has put in our power, civil, political and religious—by "pen and tongue, by vote and prayer"—and all those parties or organizations, political or religious, whose motto is not the immediate death of this terrific curse and dishonor, are unworthy of the fellowship or support of the true disciples of Christ.

Resolved, 2. That immediate emancipation is the right of the slave and the duty of the master; and that we are not at liberty to demand, or receive less than this full measure of justice and restitution; and to the accomplishment of this purpose we bend all our efforts, and we cannot turn aside from our holy purpose at the suggestions of a worldly policy, which would mingle sordid expediency with the pure and noble counsels of our Lord Jesus Christ. We cannot act upon the policy of choosing the least of two evils; but we must treat all such suggestions of a compromising policy, as the offspring of that wisdom which is earthly, sensual, devilish.

UNITARIAN.

Additional to the memoranda given on page 504, respecting the Unitarian Church, are the resolutions passed at a Convention of the Unitarian Church, held at Springfield, Massachusetts, October 14, 1863:

Rev. Dr. Hill, of Worcester, Mass., now moved a series of patriotic resolutions:

Whereas, individuals and ecclesiastical bodies have, at different times and in different places, published opinions on the duties of religious men, that have served to awaken doubts in the minds of the conscientious and weaken the hands of the Government; therefore—

Resolved, By members of the Unitarian body assembled in convention in Springfield, Massachusetts, that we tender to the President of the United States our sympathy and our prayers in this great day of the country's peril and his responsibility; that while as Christians we are peacemakers, and labor for the spread of peace, we cheerfully offer our own life, and that of our children for the perilled life of the nation; that, while we owe allegiance to the constituted authorities at all times, we hold it now, when treason and rebellion are abroad, an especial duty, both by word and act, to express it, and that while the privilege of individual freedom is vouchsafed to all, irrespective of color, as a religious right sanctioned by the spirit and letter of the scriptures, we cannot refrain from the expression of our satisfaction at the proclamation of freedom by the Chief Magistrate to millions now in bondage, and the indulgence of the hope that the tremendous scenes through which we are passing will result in the liberty and Christian progress of all.

Rev. Dr. Farley, of Brooklyn, New York, seconded the resolutions with a brief but forcible speech. He thought if ever a man demanded, and needed, and deserved the cordial co-operation, and sympathy, and prayers of a people, Abraham Lincoln was that man.

The resolutions were unanimously adopted, and the Convention then adjourned.

Religious Duties of Masters to Servants.

The following paragraphs are from recent secular papers:

The Episcopal Convention of South Carolina has declared that the marriage relation binds slave and master equally; that every Christian master should so regulate the sale or disposal of a married slave as not to infringe the Divine injunction forbidding the separation of husband and wife; that where an involuntary and final separation of married slaves has occurred the case of the sufferers is to be distinguished from any human agency which has separated them. The master is responsible to God for disregarding his commands; the slaves are entitled to sympathy and consideration; that in such cases of separation where neither party is at fault, and where separation appears to be permanent and final, the refusal to allow a second marriage would often produce much evil and hardship, and this Convention, in giving its judgment in favor of such marriages, would do so in the qualified language applied by the Apostles in cases of self-restraint: "If they cannot contain, let them marry; for it is better to marry than to burn."

The Protestant and Catholic clergy of the Confederacy are calling attention to the duty of enforcing the sanctity of the marriage relation among slaves. The Baptist Convention of Georgia has adopted an emphatic resolution upon the subject. The Southern Churchman quotes various religious authorities, setting forth the sinfulness of any neglect by masters of this Christian duty; among them Bishop Verot, (Roman Catholic Bishop of Savannah,) who says: "Slavery, to become a permanent institution of the South, must be made to conform to the law of God; a Southern Confederacy will never thrive unless it rests upon morality and order; the Supreme Arbiter of nations will not bless with stability and prosperity a state of things which would be a flagrant violation of His holy commandments."

In this connection, this paragraph from Dr. Jacob Cooper's Article on Slavery in the Church Courts, Danville Review, December, 1864, p. 521, has interest:

In Transylvania Presbytery, at its spring meeting in April, 1861, a resolution was introduced by Rev. S. B. Cheek, to memorialize the Legislature for the passage of a law permitting church members and others who had a conscience in the matter, to have the marriages of their slaves legally solemnized. By this the master would voluntarily submit to the pecuniary loss incurred by making it impossible to sell either one of a married couple without the other. This resolution contemplated no compulsory action on any, save those who felt scandalized that Christian masters must, by existing laws, see members of their own households and churches living in a state of concubinage, and who chose to avail themselves of its provisions to put away this sin. Though it was introduced in the most Christian spirit, and embraced a case where the consciences of believers ought, if ever, to be bound, yet this resolution was laid on the table, nearly every member of Presbytery voting against it. For it was argued by an eminent man, himself once an emancipationist, that though the matter presented was one of undoubted grievance, involving a sin which ought to be purged away, yet, to prevent agitation in the Church at such a time of intense political strife, there must be no internecine killing; and so, with a few words of caution, spoken in a whisper, against drawing upon the church the suspicion of sharing in the Abolition crusade, this paper was secretly buried like an untimely birth.

Valuable Records from the Bureau of Military Justice.

As illustrating the slave system, and the action of the Administration in the enforcement of the Proclamation of Emancipation, as well as the character of the war waged against the national authority, the following original records from the Bureau of Military Justice possess historic value:

CASE OF ROBERT TAYLOR, OF TENNESSEE.

WAR DEPARTMENT, ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE,
WASHINGTON, May 9, 1864.

[General Court Martial Orders, No. 8.]

1.—Before a Military Commission, consisting of Captain C. Thompson, 19th Michigan Volunteers; Captain Owen Griffith, 22d Wisconsin Volunteers; Captain James Nutt, 9th Indiana Volunteers; Captain D. R. May, 22d Wisconsin

Volunteers; First Lieutenant George Nanman, 22d Wisconsin Volunteers; and which convened at Murfreesboro', Tennessee, September 14, 1863, pursuant to Special Orders, No. 8, dated Post Headquarters, Murfreesboro', September 9, 1863, was arraigned and tried—

Robert Taylor, a citizen.

CHARGE—"Murder!"

Specification.—"In this: that he, said Robert Taylor, a citizen of Coffee county, in the State of Tennessee, did beat a negro woman named 'Reter,' in such manner that she died from the effects of the wounds thus inflicted. This on or about the 31st day of August, 1863, at or near the residence of said Robert Taylor, about three miles from the town of Hillsboro', in Coffee county, Tennessee."

To which charge and specification the accused, Robert Taylor, a citizen, pleaded "Not Guilty."

FINDING.—The Commission having maturely considered the evidence adduced, finds the accused, Robert Taylor, a citizen, as follows:

Of the Specification, "Guilty."

Of the Charge, "Not Guilty as charged, but 'Guilty of manslaughter.'"

SENTENCE.—And the Commission does therefore sentence him, Robert Taylor, a citizen, "To be confined in the State Penitentiary for the period of five years."

11. The proceedings, findings, and sentence in the foregoing case having been approved by the Major General commanding the Department, and laid before the President of the United States, the following are his orders:

The testimony in the case, as found in the record, is brief and free from all discrepancy or contradiction. The prisoner, it seems, alleged that an amount of money had been stolen from him—how much was not stated—but there was no proof of any such theft, still less anything tending to connect with it the murdered woman, on whom his suspicions fell. Probably, however, from apprehension of punishment, this woman—whom he claimed to own—made an attempt to run away, was pursued by the prisoner and his neighbors, captured, and brought back. The prisoner then procured a rope, and, addressing himself to the bystanders, asked if there was any one present who could tie "a hang knot," when a man named Womack stepped forward and tied it. The prisoner then adjusted it around the neck of the woman, and, throwing it over the limb of a tree, in the sight of his own dwelling, where were his wife and daughters, the work of murder began. Finding that the woman protected herself by seizing the rope with her hands, it was slackened and her hands tied, and again she was drawn up so that her toes barely touched the ground, and in this position she was held by the prisoner until, from suffocation and exhaustion, her head fell on one side. Through the interposition of the prisoner's wife and the bystanders, the rope was then loosened, and an opportunity given the woman to revive. While this torture was going on, the prisoner declared his object to be to compel the woman to confess the theft charged upon her, but she stoutly denied any knowledge of the money alleged to have been lost. She was now taken by the prisoner to his tanyard, distant 200 or 250 yards, and was then stripped by him of all her clothes except her chemise. In the language of one of the witnesses, she was then "confined by crossing her hands and tying them together, then putting them over her knees with a stick thrust under, holding them in that position." Thus pinioned, and lying alternately on her face and on her side, as the purposes of her tormentor required, for some two hours and a half, with brief intervals, she was whipped by the prisoner with a leather thong, two inches wide and three feet long, having a knot at the end. At the expiration of this time, "some neighbors present said they thought he had whipped her about enough for that time," and he thereupon desisted. She was then untied and assisted by one of the neighbors towards the kitchen, staggering and falling several times from exhaustion on the way. She succeeded, however, in reaching the kitchen, on the threshold of which she fell, in the presence of the prisoner's wife, and a few minutes thereafter expired.

The shameless character of the defence was in keeping with the crime.

It was insisted in the defence that the woman's death was produced by some cold water, of which, in her heated and exhausted condition, she had drunk; and in attempted palliation of the prisoner's murderous brutality, it was proved by several of his neighbors that he bore a good moral character, and clothed and fed his slaves well; and for himself he stated that he had once before, on a similar charge, given the woman even a worse whipping than that of which she died!

That a body of officers holding commissions in the Army of the United States, and acting under the responsibility of an oath, should deal thus lightly with so shocking a sacrifice of human life, cannot but excite sentiments of mingled surprise and regret. Every circumstance surrounding the crime aggravates its enormity—among which may be named the absence of all provocation; the prolonged torture to which the wretched sufferer was subjected, thus affording ample time for all human passion, had any existed, to have cooled; but above all, the sex and utter helplessness of the bond and unresisting victim.

The President directs that the sentence, inadequate as it is, shall, except as to the place of confinement, be carried into execution, and Albany, New York, is designated as the Penitentiary where he shall be confined. But while doing so, he feels it incumbent upon him to call the attention of the Army, and especially of those charged with the administration of military justice, to the insensibility displayed by this Commission, and to express the disapprobation with which it is regarded. The members of the Commission, in thus lightly dealing with one of the most revolting murders on record, have done no honor to themselves, and afforded an example which it is hoped will never again be witnessed in the service.

The prisoner will be sent, under proper guard, to Albany, New York, and delivered to the warden of the Penitentiary at that place, for confinement for the period of five years, in accordance with the sentence.

By order of the Secretary of War:

E. D. TOWNSEND,
Assistant Adjutant General.

CASE OF REV. FOUNTAIN BROWN, OF ARKANSAS.

WAR DEPARTMENT, BUREAU OF MILITARY JUSTICE,
May 24th, 1864.

To the PRESIDENT:

In the case of Fountain Brown, a citizen of Arkansas, referred to this office by order of your Excellency, May 23d, 1864, the following report is respectfully submitted:

This is an application for the pardon of a man convicted by a military commission of selling into slavery, and running beyond the Union lines, colored persons who had been made free by the President's proclamation of emancipation.

The facts proved are briefly these: The prisoner, who is a preacher and presiding elder of the Methodist Church, in the State of Arkansas, resided at or near Flat Bayou, and, at the date of the President's proclamation, held as slaves two families of negroes, numbering about ten persons, old and young, of both sexes. These families consisted of—1st, Lucy and her husband, John, two children that she had by him, and two that she had by another person, supposed to have been one McAfee, a white man; and 2d, Delia, with her husband, Horton, and two children, one by him and the other by an unknown father. After the occupation of the district, including Flat Bayou, by the Union forces, the prisoner informed these people, or at least the men, that they were free, and, if they wished, could leave—thus recognizing the proclamation and renouncing his claim to their services. They did not then leave him. In the course of last year, (1863,) the white man McAfee, who had been cohabiting with the woman Lucy, who was a light mulatto, frequently besought the prisoner to assist him in getting her and her children away with him to Texas. This arrangement the prisoner claims to have declined to enter into, on the ground that it was contrary to existing law. McAfee then proposed to buy them, but the prisoner refused to make the sale; yet, after much solicitation and the offer of seven thousand dollars for the lot, he finally yielded. The bargain was struck; he received four thousand dollars cash in hand, and the purchaser's promise to pay the balance; and McAfee carried off the women and children, eight in number, beyond the lines, and, as it is supposed, to Texas. One of the colored men, the husband of Lucy, left his wife at home on Monday morning, and, returning on Tuesday evening, found no trace of her or her children. Powerless to assert their rights, or ignorant of them, they had been abducted by McAfee, who abandoned his own wife at Flat Bayou, where she still resides.

The men both testify that their wives did not want to go away, and it would appear that they contemplated with aversion and terror the probability of being compelled by McAfee to accompany him.

It seems that the conscience of the prisoner, or his fear of the vengeance of the outraged law, would not let him rest. He made his appearance at the Headquarters at Pine Bluff, and, relating his story, solicited exemption from prosecution. He was, however, arraigned before a military commission for kidnapping and for selling into slavery persons of African descent made free by the President's proclamation, found guilty, and sentenced to confinement in a military prison for five years. Major General Steele, commanding the Department, approved the finding and sentence, and forwarded the proceedings for the action of the President, which has not yet been had.

In the opinion of this officer, it was not requisite that the confirmation of the President should be obtained; but, as it is presumable that the execution of the sentence will not commence until directed by him, it is expedient and proper that action should be taken, and it is recommended that the sentence be confirmed.

The pardon of the prisoner is now applied for by citizens of Arkansas, who sign a petition averring that he has subscribed the oath prescribed by the proclamation of amnesty, and has always heretofore been a good and influential man in the church and the community. The paper sets forth no other proof of loyalty. This petition is favorably recommended by Colonel Powell Clayton, commanding at Pine Bluff. It is presented by Mr. A. A. C. Rogers, who claims to be a member of Congress elect from the Second District of Arkansas, and who says that he believes the prisoner intended no wrong; that the act for which he was tried occurred soon after the Federal occupation of that section, "whilst all was confusion, doubt, and uncertainty;" that the husband and father of the negroes sold had been taken to Texas, the owner wanted the wife and children, they wanted to go, and the prisoner sold them, in ignorance of the nature of the offence. He adds that he thinks the pardon, if granted, would strengthen the good feeling of his district toward the government.

Mr. Rogers has fallen into several serious errors in his version of the case. He states that the husband and father of the negroes sold had been taken to Texas. So far from this being true, it is in evidence that the husbands of both the women are still at Flat Bayou; and so far from the woman Lucy wanting to go, her husband testifies that she begged him to remove her from the custody of the prisoner, and of McAfee, lest she should be taken away by force.

Besides, whether the wishes of the adults about going or remaining were consulted or not, it is a mockery of truth, as shallow as it is wicked, to attribute consent to the six helpless and mindless children, the oldest of whom was a boy of seven, and the youngest a baby but a few months old. It would require a rule of law as repugnant to reason as the extinct slave-code of Arkansas was revolting to humanity, to impute the exercise of volition to the unhappy little beings, whom his barbarous avarice, proving stronger than his sense of the obligations of law, human or divine, impelled a presiding elder of the Methodist Church to sell into a life of hopeless bondage in a distant State.

Moreover, whatever "confusion" may, as Mr. Rogers avers, have attended the advent of the Union troops at Flat Bayou, it does not appear to have unsettled the perceptions of the prisoner, who, so far from being in "doubt and uncertainty," as to the law by which he was bound, expressly told McAfee that a sale would be illegal, and only forgot his scruples and his renunciation of the authority of a master, when the tempting bid of seven thousand dollars was finally offered.

The crime of the prisoner was a deliberate and wilful violation of law. It set at naught the proclamation of emancipation. It snatched two wretched females, free by that charter, away from their husbands and surrendered them to a thralldom of lust and violence, to end only with their lives. It consigned six unoffending children, free by that charter, to perpetual servitude, in a region deemed by the purchaser (who was also the father of at least two of them) safely remote from the influences of liberty and the restraints of law.

All the features of the offence are so brutal and so depraved, that to be abhorred they need only to be recited; but when it is considered that the perpetrator is a presiding elder of the Methodist Church of the State of Arkansas, a man, by his position and his pretensions, the exemplar of public and private morality among the people around him, to whom multitudes looked up as their preceptor and spiritual guide, it must be admitted that the measure of his guilt is incomparably aggravated.

That a criminal of so deep a dye, who has been adjudged to suffer the abridgment of his liberty for five years, for depriving eight human beings of theirs forever, should (with the price of his guilt still in his pocket) ask a pardon from the government he has defied, seems an instance of effrontery scarcely paralleled even in the annals of the present rebellion.

The government, it is conceived, would be recreant to the principles which it has been forced by treason to inaugurate, if it were to treat their flagrant violation with lenity.

The proclamation of emancipation is nothing, or it is an irrevocable decree of freedom to all within its terms.

It is a solemn law of the land, upheld by the inherent war-powers of a nation struggling for self-preservation, sanctioned by reason and sanctified by precious blood. Violations of it should be punished in proportion to the magnitude of their consequences, and the importance of sustaining it by warning examples.

The absence of prohibitory sanctions in the proclamation itself, furnishes no pretext for the misinterpretation which would exempt the prisoner from punishment for his crime. These persons stood before the law disenthralled of the shackles of slavery and absolutely free, and so the prisoner had recognized them to be. He, having, with a full knowledge of their emancipation, deliberately re-enslaved them, wilfully incurred all the penalties denounced against the most atrocious species of kidnapping.

The crime of the prisoner, by reason of his conspicuous social and religious position, has doubtless attracted the notice of a large number of the people of his State. His pardon, obtaining equal publicity, would, it is believed, be taken by the traitorous adherents of slavery as a tacit official declaration that the Government did not seriously intend to maintain the most momentous and vital of its war measures, and that the President consented to be understood as permitting to pass into a mockery that proclamation upon which, on the 1st day of January, 1863, he solemnly invoked "the considerate judgment of mankind, and the gracious favor of Almighty God."

This is believed to be the first case in which a violation of the Proclamation of Emancipation has been brought to the notice of the President. It is deemed fortunate for the great purposes of justice that the proof is so strong and the circumstances so marked. The offender is a prominent personage; the victims young and weak; the sale made with full knowledge of the law and the rights of freedom it bestowed; the transaction notorious and basely mercenary. It is fit to be made a test case, in which the Government may distinctly re-assure the South of its unalterable purpose to enforce the decree which it has deliberately promulgated. If, while the able-bodied freedmen, attracted and encouraged by that decree, are enrolling themselves as soldiers under the standard which they recognize as the symbol and the guaranty of freedom, and are exposing themselves to the perils of battle on the field, and to the horrors of massacre if captured, their late masters are suffered to sell and transport their helpless wives and children into renewed servitude, without encountering the inflexible severity of adequate punishment, the Government cannot fail to stand before the world dishonored by such breach of a faith which, on the part of the unhappy race with whom it has been pledged, is being everywhere bravely and loyally kept with their blood. If the Government could pardon this outrage upon its laws, or mitigate its punishment, how can it forget the wretched victims of the crime? The conviction is fully entertained that the question of pardon or mitigation should not even be considered until these victims shall have been returned to within our military lines, and thus restored to the status of freedom which they there occupied.

AUGUST 9, 1864.

CASE OF WEST BOGAN, OF ARKANSAS.

JUDGE ADVOCATE GENERAL'S OFFICE,

May 30, 1864.

TO THE PRESIDENT:

West Bogan, a negro, was tried February 1st before a military Commission, sitting at Helena, Ark., on the charge of "murder."

In this that the said West Bogan on or about the 15th of December, 1863, killed Munroe Bogan, a citizen of Phillips Co., Arkansas, by striking him with an axe upon the head and neck.

The court found him guilty and sentenced him to be hung; General Buford approves the findings and sentence, and recommends that it be commuted to imprisonment at hard labor in some Northern penitentiary for such length of time as the Commanding General shall judge proper. Gen. Steele suspends execution in consequence of this suggestion, and forwards the proceedings for the action of the President.

The proceedings were strictly regular. The evidence showed that prisoner was and had long been a slave of Munroe Bogan, the deceased, and was still held by him as such despite the Proclamation of Emancipation. It was testified by numerous witnesses that prisoner was in general of an obedient and submissive nature, though when thwarted and irritated by oppression, reckless of what he did.

His master, on the other hand, was shown to have been cruel and exacting, forcing his slaves by constant punishments, to labor night and day and frequently on Sundays, giving them no holiday or resting time, and, as one witness testified, whipping some one every day—and this last too, not as a passionate man might do, by snatching the first weapon at hand and with it punishing a fault, but with a deliberate coolness, as shown by his regularly sending for the driver with his whip, which denoted that his temper was fully under his control.

The homicide took place in the early morning, near the prisoner's quarters, and when he was on his way to his day's task. Of the immediate cause of the difficulty, there is no evidence; but Tom, a negro at work in an adjoining field, had his attention drawn to the struggle by hearing his master's call to him, and, on looking round, saw the deceased fall, and the prisoner deal upon his prostrate body two blows with the axe in his hand, which nearly severed the head from the shoulders. It was testified by a negro witness for the prosecution, that he had heard the prisoner declare his intention to kill his master, "because his master was going to kill him for running about and going away from home." It was in evidence that the deceased had expressed, only the night before, his intention to whip the prisoner on the following day.

The negro Tom, also testified that Clarence Bogan, another field hand who was at work at his side, first heard the alarm, and said he believed that master Munroe and West were fighting.

Marin Bogan, a slave of deceased, testifies that she was sitting in her own cabin at the time of the homicide, and that her children cried out that "master was trying to whip Uncle West"; whereupon she went the door, and saw West give two blows with the axe upon her master's neck.

It can scarcely be doubted, therefore, that Munroe Bogan, at the moment of his death, was in the act of inflicting corporal punishment upon the prisoner, which, under the changed relations of the white and black populations of the Southern States, he had no right to do,—and that roused by pain and by a sense of wrong, the generally willing and submissive slave turned upon him, and took his life—converting, for the moment, into a weapon of revenge, the implement with which he was quietly going to his unrequited toil.

The case would, therefore, seem to be divested of those elements of malice and deliberate purpose, which alone can constitute the crime of murder; while the provocation under which prisoner was driven to take the life of his oppressor was great and not to be excused.

The administration of the Government must and does recognize the colored population of the rebellious States, as occupying the status of freedmen. This office in considering the present and kindred cases, necessarily accepts this recognition with all its legitimate consequences.

It is, therefore, held that Munroe Bogan, when he met his death, was in violation of law and right holding the prisoner in absolute slavery—not only holding him in slavery but also imposing upon him ceaseless toil and cruel punishments. It is a conclusion, justified by the record, that it was in resistance to an attempt by deceased to inflict such punishment, in accordance with threats previously made, that the fatal blow was struck by the prisoner, who had doubtless borne the oppressions of his task master till endurance seemed to him no longer possible.

That in these circumstances, ground is found for mitigation, and much mitigation, of the sentence pronounced, will scarcely be questioned.

It is for the President to determine how far this mitigation shall extend.

JULY 8, 1864.

CASE OF JOHN J. GLOVER, OF ARKANSAS.

WAR DEPARTMENT, BUREAU OF MILITARY JUSTICE,
June 6th, 1864.

To the PRESIDENT:

John J. Glover, alias Jake, a negro, was tried September 18th, 1863, before a military commission sitting at Memphis, Tennessee, on the charge of "murder in the first degree," under which he was accused of the murder of one George Redman, a citizen of Arkansas, in the month of August preceding. He was found guilty and sentenced to be hung.

The sentence was approved by General Hurlbut and General Sherman, and the day of execution fixed for January 29, 1864. Prisoner could not be found on that day, and subsequently General Sherman ascertained that he could not legally carry out the sentence without reference to the President, and the record has in consequence been sent to this office.

The evidence by no means warrants the sentence awarded by the court. There can be no doubt that prisoner discharged a pistol at Redman, the result of which was his death; but the circumstances under which the homicide occurred would appear to extenuate if not entirely remove the prisoner's guilt. The evidence showed that prisoner went across the Mississippi river from Tennessee to Arkansas with another negro called "Dave" at his request, for the purpose of rescuing the two young daughters of the latter from Redman's hands. This Dave was tried and convicted about the same time for the same murder; and on his trial it was testified that Redman, an old man of seventy-two years of age, was retaining the two girls in slavery against their father's will and in violation of the President's emancipation proclamation, and had declared to Dave his intention to keep them. On Dave's trial it was further shown, by the testimony of his daughter, that Redman had sworn to shoot any man that came after them. Dave and Jake, the prisoner, crossed the river together in a skiff to effect the girls' release, and about two o'clock in the morning succeeded in getting one of the girls and taking her to the boat. They went back for the other, and while reconnoitering the premises, were pursued by old Redman with a pistol, and at once took to flight. It does not appear however, that they knew that he had this pistol at the time. They ran towards the river, and being closely followed and in fact stumbled upon by Redman, Jake in his excitement drew his pistol and fired, wounding Redman so that he died a few days afterwards. Redman, Jake in his excitement drew his pistol and fired, wounding Redman so that he died a few days afterwards. Redman, it was testified, was a kind and indulgent master to his slaves, and had taken the oath of allegiance. On the same evening, some hours previously, Jake had caught a horse belonging to Redman's son, and had taken it across the river into Tennessee, afterwards returning to help Dave obtain his children. When captured, he confessed that he shot the deceased.

Much doubt cannot but be felt whether prisoner merits any punishment for the part he took in the transaction which led to the death of the deceased. It is true that he had no personal interest in the rescue of the two girls, such as his companion "Dave" had; but that rescue was a lawful and justifiable act on the part of his companion, and the prisoner's participation in it must be held to be no less justifiable and lawful.

It does not appear that he went to Redman's plantation with a purpose of murder, but rather with a single view to the assistance of his friend in the delivery of his children from bondage; and the agitation caused by the pursuit of the master, and the imagined peril of his own life, led him involuntarily into the commission of the deed for which he has already suffered an imprisonment of nine weary months.

It is true he was engaged in a business for which he could offer no excuse but that of friendship, and a wish to extend to the family of his comrade the benefits of the same freedom which he himself enjoyed; and with a knowledge of the dangers of the enterprise in which a fellow-feeling led him to take a part, and of the extreme severity with which offenders of his race are treated by their white masters, it can scarcely be imputed to him as a crime that he took with him a weapon of defence, nor that in his great and natural terror under the close and armed pursuit to which he was subjected, he should have instinctively made use of it.

It is believed to be a case in which a strong and armed man has rashly thrown away his life in an endeavor to enslave a feeble young woman in defiance of the proclamation of the President which had declared her free.

A. LINCOLN.

JULY 8, 1864.

CASE OF JOHN Y. BEALL.

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF THE EAST,
NEW YORK CITY, Feb. 21st, 1865.

[General Orders, No. 17.]

1. The following General Order will replace General Order No. 14, from these Headquarters:

11. Before a Military Commission which convened at Fort Lafayette, New York Harbor, and at New York City, by virtue of Special Orders Nos. 14 and 42, current series, from these Headquarters, of Jan. 17th and Feb. 17th, 1865, and of which Brig. Gen. Fitz Henry Warren, United States Volunteers, is President, was arraigned and tried—

John Y. Beall.

CHARGE 1.—"Violation of the law of war."

Specification 1st.—"In this: that John Y. Beall, a citizen of the insurgent State of Virginia, did, on or about the 19th day of September, 1864, at or near Kelly's Island, in the State of Ohio, without lawful authority, and by force of arms, seize and capture the steamboat 'Philo Parsons.'"

Specification 2d.—"In this: that John Y. Beall, a citizen of the insurgent State of Virginia, did, on or about the 19th day of September, 1864, at or near Middle Bass Island, in the State of Ohio, without lawful authority, and by force of arms, seize, capture, and sink the steamboat 'Island Queen.'"

Specification 3d.—"In this: that John Y. Beall, a citizen of the insurgent State of Virginia, was found acting as a spy, at or near Kelly's Island, in the State of Ohio, on or about the 19th day of September, 1864."

Specification 4th.—"In this: that John Y. Beall, a citizen of the insurgent State of Virginia, was found acting as a spy, on or about the 19th day of September, 1864, at or near Middle Bass Island, in the State of Ohio."

Specification 5th.—"In this: that John Y. Beall, a citizen of the insurgent State of Virginia, was found acting as a spy, on or about the 16th day of December, 1864, at or near Suspension Bridge, in the State of New York."

Specification 6th.—"In this: that John Y. Beall, a citizen of the insurgent State of Virginia, being without lawful authority, and for unlawful purposes, in the State of New York, did, in said State of New York, undertake to carry on irregular and unlawful warfare as a guerrilla, and, in the execution of said undertaking, attempted to destroy the lives and property of the peaceful and nonoffending inhabitants of said State, and of persons therein travelling, by throwing a train of cars, and the passengers in said cars, from the railroad track, on the railroad between Dunkirk and Buffalo, by placing obstructions across the said track."

All this in said State of New York, and on or about the 15th day of December, 1864, at or near Buffalo.

CHARGE II.—"Acting as a spy."

Specification 1st.—"In this: that John Y. Beall, a citizen of the insurgent State of Virginia, was found acting as a spy in the State of Ohio, at or near Kelley's Island, on or about the 19th day of September, 1864."

Specification 2d.—"In this: that John Y. Beall, a citizen of the insurgent State of Virginia, was found acting as a spy in the State of Ohio, on or about the 19th day of September, 1864, at or near Middle Bass Island."

Specification 3d.—"In this: that John Y. Beall, a citizen of the insurgent State of Virginia, was found acting as a spy, in the State of New York, at or near Suspension Bridge, on or about the 16th day of September, 1864."

To which charges and specifications the accused pleaded "Not Guilty."

FINDING.—Of the 1st specification, 1st charge, "Guilty."

Of the 2d specification, 1st charge, "Guilty."

Of the 3d specification, 1st charge, "Guilty."

Of the 4th specification, 1st charge, "Guilty."

Of the 5th specification, 1st charge, "Guilty."

Of the 6th specification, 1st charge, "Guilty."

Of the 1st charge, "Guilty."

Of the 1st specification, 2d charge, "Guilty."

Of the 2d specification, 2d charge, "Guilty."

Of the 3d specification, 2d charge, "Not Guilty," as to the day averred, but guilty of acting as a spy, at or near Suspension Bridge, in the State of New York, on or about December 16th, 1864.

Of the 2d charge, "Guilty."

SENTENCE.—And the Commission does therefore sentence him, the said John Y. Beall, "To be hanged by the neck until dead, at such time and place as the General in command of the Department may direct," two-thirds of the members concurring therein.

III. In reviewing the proceedings of the Court, the circumstances on which the charges are founded, and the questions of law raised on the trial, the Major General Commanding has given the most earnest and careful consideration to them all.

The testimony shows that the accused, while holding a commission from the authorities at Richmond as Acting Master in the navy of the insurgent States, embarked at Sandwich, in Canada, on board the "Philo Parsons," an unarmed steamer, while on one of her regular trips, carrying passengers and freight from Detroit, in the State of Michigan, to Sandusky, in the State of Ohio. The captain had been induced by Burley, one of the confederates of the accused, to land at Sandwich, which was not one of the regular stopping places of the steamer, for the purpose of receiving them. Here the accused and two others took passage. At Malden, another Canadian port, and one of the regular stopping places, about twenty-five more came on board. The accused was in citizen's dress, showing no insignia of his rank or profession, embarking as an ordinary passenger, and representing himself to be on a pleasure trip to Kelley's Island, in Lake Erie, within the jurisdiction of the State of Ohio.

After eight hours, he and his associates, arming themselves with revolvers and hand-axes, brought surreptitiously on board, rose on the crew, took possession of the steamer, threw overboard part of the freight, and robbed the clerk of the money in his charge—putting all on board under duress. Later in the evening he and his party took possession of another unarmed steamer, (the "Island Queen,") scuttled her, and set her adrift on the lake. These transactions occurred within the jurisdiction of the State of Ohio, on the 19th day of September, 1864.

On the 16th day of December, 1864, the accused was arrested near the Suspension Bridge over the Niagara River, within the State of New York. The testimony shows that he and two officers of the army of the insurgent States—Col. Martin and Lieut. Headley—with two other confederates, had made an unsuccessful attempt, under the direction of the first-named officer, to throw the passenger train, coming from the West to Buffalo, off the railroad track, for the purpose of robbing the express company. It is further shown that this was the third attempt in which the accused was concerned to accomplish the same object; that between two of these attempts the party, including the accused, went to Canada and returned, and that they were on their way back to Canada when he was arrested. In these transactions, as in that on Lake Erie, the accused, though holding a commission from the insurgent authorities at Richmond, was in disguise, procuring information with the intention of using it, as he subsequently did, to inflict injury upon unarmed citizens of the United States, and their private property.

The substance of the charges against the accused is that he was acting as a spy, and carrying on irregular or guerrilla warfare against the United States; in other words, that he was acting in the two-fold character of a spy and a guerrillero. He was found guilty on both charges, and sentenced to death; and the Major General Commanding fully concurs in the judgment of the Court. In all the transactions with which he was implicated—in one as a chief, and in the other as a subordinate agent—he was not only acting the part of a spy in procuring information to be used for hostile purposes, but he was also committing acts condemned by the common judgment and the common conscience of all civilized states, except when done in open warfare by avowed enemies. Throughout these transactions he was not only in disguise, but personating a false character.

It is not at all essential to the purpose of sustaining the finding of the Court, and yet it is not inappropriate, to state, as an indication of the animus of the accused and his confederates, that the attempts to throw the railroad train off the track were made at night, when the obstruction would be less likely than in the daytime to be noticed by the engineer or conductor, thus putting in peril the lives of hundreds of men, women, and children. In these attempts three officers, holding commissions in the military service of the insurgent States, were concerned. The accused is shown by the testimony to be a man of education and refinement, and it is difficult to account for his agency in transactions so abhorrent to the moral sense, and so inconsistent with all the rules of honorable warfare.

The accused, in justification of the transaction on Lake Erie, produced the manifesto of Jefferson Davis, assuming the responsibility of the act, and declaring that it was done by his authority. It is hardly necessary to say that no such assumption can sanction an act not warranted by the laws of civilized warfare. If Mr. Davis were at the head of an independent government, recognized as such by other nations, he would have no power to sanction what the usage of civilized states has condemned. The Government of the United States, from a desire to mitigate the asperities of war, has given to the insurgents of the South the benefit of the rules which govern sovereign states in the conduct of hostilities with each other; and any violation of these rules should, for the sake of good order here and the cause of humanity throughout the world, be visited with the severest penalty. War, under its mildest aspects, is the heaviest calamity that can befall our race; and he who, in a spirit of revenge or with lawless violence, transcends the limits to which it is restricted by the common belief of all Christian communities, should receive the punishment which the common voice has declared to be due to the crime. The Major General Commanding feels that a want of firmness and inflexibility on his part, in executing the sentence of death in such a case, would be an offence against the outraged civilization and humanity of the age.

It is hereby ordered that John Y. Beall be hanged by the neck till he is dead, on Governor's Island, on Friday, the 24th day of February, inst., between the hours of 12 m. and 2 in the afternoon.*

The commanding officer at Fort Columbus is charged with the execution of this order.

By command of Major General Dix:

D. T. VAN BUREN,

Colonel and Assistant Adjutant General.

CASE OF ROBERT C. KENNEDY.

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF THE EAST,
NEW YORK CITY, March 20th, 1865.

[General Orders, No. 24.]

I, Before a Military Commission, which convened at Fort Lafayette, New York Harbor, and at New York City, by virtue of Special Orders, No. 14, current series, from these Headquarters, of January 17th, 1865, and of which Brig.-Gen. Fitz Henry Warren, United States Volunteers, is President, was arraigned and tried:

Robert C. Kennedy.

CHARGE I.—"Acting as a spy."

*In the Virginia Senate, March 3, 1865, joint resolutions were unanimously adopted expressing the sentiments of the General Assembly in regard to the execution of John Yates Beall, and recommending the adoption of such steps as may be necessary in retaliation for the offence committed by the authorities of the United States.

Specification 1st.—"In this, that Robert C. Kennedy, a captain in the military service of the Insurgent States, was found acting as a spy in the City of New York, in the State of New York, on or about the first day of November, 1864."

Specification 2d.—"In this, that Robert C. Kennedy, a captain in the military service of the insurgent States, was found acting as a spy in the City of Detroit, in the State of Michigan, on or about the 23rd day of December, 1864."

CHARGE II.—"Violation of the laws of war."

Specification.—"In this, that Robert C. Kennedy, a captain in the military service of the insurgent States, undertook to carry on irregular and unlawful warfare in the City and State of New York, and, in the execution of said undertaking, attempted to burn and destroy said city of New York, by setting fire thereto. All this in said city of New York on or about the 25th day of November, 1864."

"To which charges and specifications the accused pleaded 'Not Guilty.'"

FINDING.—"Of specification 1st, charge I, 'Guilty.'"

Of specification 2d, charge I, "Guilty."

Of charge I, "Guilty."

Of specification, charge II, "Guilty."

Of charge II, "Guilty."

SENTENCE.—"And, thereupon, the Commission sentence him, said Robert C. Kennedy, Captain in the military service of the insurgent States, 'to be hanged by the neck until dead, at such time and place as the General in command of the Department may direct,' two thirds of the members concurring therein."

II. The Major-General Commanding approves the proceedings, finding and sentence of the court. It is shown by the testimony:

1. That the accused has been an officer in the service of the insurgent States since August, 1861.

2. That he was in the City of New York in disguise, and under a false name, in the month of November, several weeks immediately preceding the attempt to set the city on fire.

3. That he was here for a purpose which he refused to disclose, and that he returned hastily by night to Canada.

4. That he stated, in the presence of several persons, that he set fire to Barnum's Museum, and to one of the "down town" hotels; and

5. That he was arrested at Detroit in disguise, armed with a revolver, travelling under a false name, and with a passport representing himself to be a loyal citizen.

On proof of these facts, he was convicted of acting as a spy and carrying on irregular and illegal warfare. The person who testified to his confession of having set on fire Barnum's Museum and one of the hotels in the lower part of the city, was not under duress or an accomplice, was a reluctant witness, and could have had no motive to make a false statement. He is corroborated by other testimony.

The attempt to set fire to the city of New York is one of the greatest atrocities of the age. There is nothing in the annals of barbarism, which evinces greater vindictiveness. It was not a mere attempt to destroy the city, but to set fire to crowded hotels and places of public resort, in order to secure the greatest possible destruction of human life. The evidence shows that Barnum's Museum and ten hotels were fired on the evening of the 25th of November, the fires in most of them breaking out in quick succession, and indicating not only deliberate and complex design and concert on the part of the incendiaries, but a cool calculation to create so many conflagrations at the same time as to baffle the efforts of the Fire Department to extinguish them. In all the buildings fired, not only non-combatant men, but women and children, were congregated in great numbers; and nothing but the most diabolical spirit of revenge could have impelled the incendiaries to acts so revolting.

The participation of the accused in this inhuman enterprise is a crime, which follows him, and his liability to answer for it is not to be cast off by withdrawing for a time from the jurisdiction within which it was committed. He has not only been guilty of carrying on irregular warfare, in violation of the usages of civilized States in the conduct of war, but he has, by outraging every principle of humanity, incurred the highest penalty known to the law.

His escape to Canada was followed in a few days by his return to the United States, again in disguise, with a new name, and personating a loyal citizen, while holding a commission in the service of the insurgents, thus furnishing the highest prima facie evidence that he was acting as a spy. No rebutting evidence was produced on the trial, although it continued twenty-three days, of which fifteen were given to the accused, by adjournments, to procure testimony and prepare his defence. Two papers were read as a part of his address to the Court; one a pledge given to the transportation agent in Canada, to return with all due diligence "to the Confederacy;" and the other, a certificate made by him that he was a citizen of the State of Louisiana, with a request that he might be provided with means to return "to the Confederacy." Admitting their genuineness, they do not repel the presumption raised by the circumstances attending his arrest—the disguise and the false pretences, with which he was found within our lines. His flight to Canada was not a return within the lines of his own army. If he had found his way back to the insurgent States, and had been subsequently captured in battle, he could not have been convicted under the first specification of the first charge. But neither of these facts exists to remove or terminate his liability to conviction under that specification.

Whatever question may exist as to the effect of his return to Canada, after having lurked as a spy, as charged in the first specification, no such question can arise as to his guilt as a spy, as charged in the second specification, which sets forth an offence entirely distinct from the first, of which he has been convicted on full proof.

The Major General Commanding considers his duty as clear in this case as in that of Beall. The lives, the property, the domestic security of non-combatant citizens must be protected against all invasion not in strict accordance with the laws and usages of civilized States in the conduct of war. Crimes, which outrage and shock the moral sense by their atrocity, must not only be punished and the perpetrators be deprived of the power of repeating them, but the sternest condemnation of the law must be presented to others to deter them from the commission of similar enormities.

Robert C. Kennedy will be hanged by the neck till he is dead, at Fort Lafayette, New York Harbor, on Saturday the twenty-fifth day of March instant, between the hours of twelve, noon, and two in the afternoon.

The Commanding Officer of Fort Lafayette is charged with the execution of this order.

By command of Major General Dix:

D. T. VAN BUREN,
Colonel and Asst Adj't Gen.

The Military and Rev. S. H. Wingfield.

HEADQUARTERS NORFOLK AND PORTSMOUTH,
NORFOLK, VA., February 25, '64.

[Special Orders No. 44.]

IV.—It having been reported to the General Commanding that S. H. Wingfield, of Portsmouth, is an avowed secessionist, and that he takes every opportunity to disseminate his traitorous dogmas, much to the annoyance of his loyal neighbors, and that on one occasion at a place of worship, while the prayer for the President of the United States was being read, his conduct was such as to annoy and disgust the loyal portion of the congregation; and believing a wholesome example is necessary for the benefit of Mr. Wingfield in particular, and the class in this community he represents in general—men of education and ability, who use the talents God has given them for the purpose of stirring up strife against the Government of the United States;

It is therefore ordered that the Provost Marshal arrest Mr. S. H. Wingfield, and that he be turned over to Col Smettle to work for three (3) months cleaning the streets of Norfolk and Portsmouth, thus employing his time for the benefit of the Government he has abused, and in a small way atone for his disloyalty and treason.

By order of Brig. Gen'l E. A. WILD:

GEORGE H. JOHNSTON,
Capt. and Asst. Adj't Gen'l.

[By Telegram from Fort Monroe, dated March 1st, '64.]
To Brig. Gen'l WILD:

The remainder of the sentence imposed by Brig. Gen'l Wild on the Rev. Mr. Wingfield is remitted; he will be sent to Capt. Cassells at Fort Monroe for custody. His punishment is remitted, not from respect for the man or his acts, or because it is unjust, but because its nature may be supposed to reflect upon the Christian Church, which, by his connection with it, has been already too much disgraced.

By command of Maj. Gen'l BUTLER:

A. F. PUFFER,
Capt. and A. D. C.

[By Telegram from Fort Monroe, dated March 4th, '64.]
To Brig. Gen'l WILD:

Did you receive my order of the 1st inst., by telegraph, concerning Wingfield?

BENJ. F. BUTLER, Maj. Gen'l.

[By Telegram from Fort Monroe, dated March 4th, '64.]
To Brig. Gen'l WILD:

The order concerning Wingfield was sent you by telegraph, but by the blindness of the operators did not reach you.

BENJ. F. BUTLER,
Major Gen'l Com'd.

[By Telegram from Fort Monroe, dated March 12th, '64.]
To Brig. Gen'l WILD:

Wrote you this A. M. about Wingfield.

BENJ. F. BUTLER, Maj. Gen'l.

[By Telegram from Fort Monroe, dated March 29th, '64.]
To Brig. Gen'l WILD:

It is complained to me that no hearing was had by Wingfield previous to his sentence; if so, is there any objection to a hearing before me?

BENJ. F. BUTLER, Maj. Gen'l.

Gen'l Pope's Modification of Gen. Rosecrans's Order respecting Religious Convocations.

Paragraph 3, of Special Order No. 62, from the office of Provost Marshal General, of date March 8, 1864, prescribing rules to be observed by religious convocations, is hereby so modified as to read as follows:

"It is hereby made the duty of all such assemblages to submit the roll of the members of their organization to the Provost Marshal of the district in which the assemblage has convened, before proceeding to the transaction of business.

"The Provost Marshal to whom the roll is submitted will thereupon proceed to ascertain from the records of his office whether any of the members of said assemblage have failed to take and subscribe to the oath prescribed by said Special Orders No. 62, and any person found to have so failed will be by him at once forbidden to participate in the business of the assembly, until such time as he has complied with the requirements of said order; and should any person so forbidden meet with or attempt in any manner to participate in the doings of said assembly, he will be immediately arrested and sent to this office, with a statement of the facts in his case."

J. H. BAKER,
Provost Marshal General.

PROCEEDINGS

OF THE

SECOND SESSION OF THE THIRTY-EIGHTH CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES, AND THE SECOND SESSION OF THE SECOND CONGRESS OF THE REBEL STATES.

Second Session, Thirty-Eighth Congress.
PRESIDENT LINCOLN'S FOURTH ANNUAL MESSAGE,
DECEMBER 5, 1864.

Fellow-Citizens of the Senate and House of Representatives:

Again the blessings of health and abundant harvests claim our profoundest gratitude to Almighty God.

The condition of our foreign affairs is reasonably satisfactory.

Mexico continues to be a theatre of civil war. While our political relations with that country have undergone no change, we have, at the same time, strictly maintained neutrality between the belligerents.

At the request of the States of Costa Rica and Nicaragua, a competent engineer has been authorized to make a survey of the river San Juan and the port of San Juan. It is a source of much satisfaction that the difficulties which for a moment excited some political apprehensions, and caused a closing of the inter-oceanic transit route, have been amicably adjusted, and that there is a good prospect that the route will soon be reopened with an increase of capacity and adaptation. We could not exaggerate either the commercial or the political importance of that great improvement.

It would be doing injustice to an important South American State not to acknowledge the directness, frankness, and cordiality with which the United States of Colombia have entered into intimate relations with this Government. A claims convention has been constituted to complete the unfinished work of the one which closed its session in 1861.

The new liberal constitution of Venezuela having gone into effect with the universal acquiescence of the people, the Government under it has been recognized, and diplomatic intercourse with it has opened in a cordial and friendly spirit. The long-deferred Aves Island claim has been satisfactorily paid and discharged.

Mutual payments have been made of the claims awarded by the late joint commission for the settlement of claims between the United States and Peru. An earnest and cordial friendship continues to exist between the two countries, and such efforts as were in my power have been used to remove misunderstanding and avert a threatened war between Peru and Spain.

Our relations are of the most friendly nature with Chili, the Argentine Republic, Bolivia, Costa Rica, Paraguay, San Salvador, and Hayti.

During the past year no differences of any kind have arisen with any of those republics, and, on the other hand, their sympathies with the United States are constantly expressed with cordiality and earnestness.

The claim arising from the seizure of the cargo of the brig Macedonian in 1821 has been paid in full by the government of Chili.

Civil war continues in the Spanish part of San Domingo, apparently without prospect of an early close.

Official correspondence has been freely opened with Liberia, and it gives us a pleasing view of social and political progress in that republic. It may be expected to derive new vigor from American influence, improved by the rapid disappearance of slavery in the United States.

I solicit your authority to furnish to the republic a gunboat at moderate cost, to be reimbursed to the United States by installments. Such a vessel is needed for the safety of that State against the native African races; and in Liberian hands it would be more effective in arresting the African slave trade than a squadron in our own hands. The possession of the least organized naval force would stimulate a generous ambition in the republic, and the confluence which we should manifest by furnishing it would win forbearance and favor towards the colony from all civilized nations.

The proposed overland telegraph between America and Europe, by the way of Behring's Straits and Asiatic Russia, which was sanctioned by Congress at the last session, has been undertaken, under very favorable circumstances, by an association of American citizens, with the cordial goodwill and support as well of this government as of those of Great Britain and Russia. Assurances have been received from most of the South American States of their high appreciation of the enterprise, and their readiness to co-operate in constructing lines tributary to that world-encircling communication. I learn with much satisfaction that the noble design of a telegraphic communication between the eastern coast of America and Great Britain has been renewed with full expectation of its early accomplishment.

Thus it is hoped that with the return of domestic peace the country will be able to resume with energy and advantage its former high career of commerce and civilization.

Our very popular and estimable representative in Egypt died in April last. An unpleasant altercation which arose between the temporary incumbent of the office and the government of the Pasha resulted in a suspension of intercourse. The evil was promptly corrected on the arrival of the successor in the consulate, and our relations with Egypt, as well as our relations with the Barbary Powers, are entirely satisfactory.

The rebellion which has so long been flagrant in China, has at last been suppressed, with the coöperating good offices of this government and of the other western commercial States. The judicial consular establishment there has become very difficult and onerous, and it will need legislative revision to adapt it to the extension of our commerce and to the more intimate intercourse which has been instituted with the government and people of that vast empire. China seems to be accepting with hearty good-will the conventional laws which regulate commercial and social intercourse among the western nations.

Owing to the peculiar situation of Japan, and the anomalous form of its government, the action of that empire in performing treaty stipulations is inconstant and capricious. Nevertheless, good progress has been effected by the western powers, moving with enlightened concert. Our own pecuniary claims have been allowed, or put in course of settlement, and the inland sea has been reopened to commerce. There is reason also to believe that these proceedings have increased rather than diminished the friendship of Japan towards the United States.

The ports of Norfolk, Fernandina, and Pensacola have been opened by proclamation. It is hoped that foreign merchants will now consider whether it is not safer and more profitable to themselves, as well as just to the United States, to resort to these and other open ports, than it is to pursue, through many hazards, and at vast cost, a contraband trade with the other ports which are closed, if not by actual military occupation, at least by a lawful and effective blockade.

For myself, I have no doubt of the power and duty of the Executive, under the law of nations, to exclude enemies of the human race from an asylum in the United States. If Congress should think that proceedings in such cases lack the authority of law, or ought to be further regulated by it, I recommend that provision be made for effectually preventing foreign slave-traders from acquiring domicile and facilities for their criminal occupation in our country.

It is possible that, if it were a new and open question, the maritime powers, with the lights they now enjoy, would not concede the privileges of a naval belligerent to the insurgents of the United States, destitute, as they are, and always have been, equally of ships-of-war and of ports and harbors. Disloyal emissaries have been neither less assiduous nor more successful during the last year than they were before that time in their efforts, under favor of that privilege, to enbroil our country in foreign wars. The desire and determination of the governments of the maritime States to defeat that design are believed to be as sincere as, and cannot be more earnest than, our own. Nevertheless, unforeseen political difficulties have arisen, especially in Brazilian and British ports, and on the northern boundary of the United States, which have required, and are likely to continue to require, the practice of constant vigilance, and a just and conciliatory spirit on the part of the United States, as well as of the nations concerned and their governments.

Commissioners have been appointed under the treaty with Great Britain on the adjustment of the claims of the Hudson's Bay and Puget Sound Agricultural Companies, in Oregon, and are now proceeding to the execution of the trust assigned to them.

In view of the insecurity of life and property in the region adjacent to the Canadian border, by reason of recent assaults and depredations committed by inimical and desperate persons who are harbored there, it has been thought proper to give notice that after the expiration of six months, the period conditionally stipulated in the existing arrangement with Great Britain, the United States must hold themselves at liberty to increase their naval armament upon the lakes if they shall find that proceeding necessary. The condition of the border will necessarily come into consideration in connection with the question of continuing or modifying the rights of transit from Canada through the United States, as well as the regulation of imports, which were temporarily established by the reciprocity treaty of the 5th June, 1854.

I desire, however, to be understood, while making this statement, that the colonial authorities of Canada are not deemed to be intentionally unjust or unfriendly toward the United States; but, on the contrary, there is every reason to expect that, with the approval of the imperial government, they will take the necessary measures to prevent new incursions across the border.

The act passed at the last session for the encouragement of emigration has, so far as was possible, been put into operation. It seems to need amendment which will enable the officers of the government to prevent the practice of frauds against the immigrants while on their way and on their arrival in the ports, so as to secure them here a free choice of avocations and places of settlement. A liberal disposition toward this great national policy is manifested by most of the European States, and ought to be reciprocated on our part by giving the immigrants effective national protection. I regard our emigrants as one of the principal replenishing streams which are appointed by Providence to repair the ravages of internal war and its wastes of national strength and health. All that is necessary is to secure the flow of that stream in its present fullness, and to that end the government must in every way make it manifest that it neither needs nor designs to impose involuntary military service upon those who come from other lands to cast their lot in our country.

The financial affairs of the government have been successfully administered during the last year. The legislation of the last session of Congress has beneficially affected the revenues, although sufficient time has not yet elapsed to experience the full effect of several of the provisions of the acts of Congress imposing increased taxation.

The receipts during the year, from all sources, upon the basis of warrants signed by the Secretary of the Treasury, including loans and the balance in the Treasury on the 1st day of July, 1863, were $1,394,706,007 62; and the aggregate disbursements, upon the same basis, were $1,298,056,101 89, leaving a balance in the Treasury, as shown by warrants, of $96,733,905 73.

Deduct from these amounts the amount of the principal of the public debt redeemed, and the amount of issues in substitution therefor, and the actual cash operations of the Treasury were: receipts, $854,076,646 37; disbursements, $865,234,057 86; which leaves a cash balance in the Treasury of $18,542,558 71.

Of the receipts, there were derived from customs, $102,316,152 99; from lands, $588,333 29; from direct taxes, $475,648 96; from internal revenue, $109,741,134 10; from miscellaneous sources, $47,511,448 10; and from loans applied to actual expenditures, including former balance, $623,443,929 13.

There were disbursed, for the civil service, $27,505,599 46; for pensions and Indians, $7,517,930 97; for the War Department, $90,791,842 97; for the Navy Department, $5,733,292 77; for interest of the public debt, $53,685,421 69—making an aggregate of $865,234,057 86, and leaving a balance in the Treasury of $18,542,558 71, as before stated.

For the actual receipts and disbursements for the first quarter, and the estimated receipts and disbursements for the three remaining quarters of the current fiscal year, and the general operations of the Treasury in detail, I refer you to the report of the Secretary of the Treasury. I concur with him in the opinion that the proportion of moneys required to meet the expenses consequent upon the war derived from taxation should be still further increased; and I earnestly invite your attention to this subject, to the end that there may be such additional legislation as shall be required to meet the just expectations of the Secretary.

The public debt on the 1st day of July last, as appears by the books of the Treasury, amounted to $1,740,690,489 49. Probably, should the war continue for another year, that amount may be increased by not far from $500,000,000. Well, as it is for the most part, by our own people, it has become a substantial branch of national, though private, property. For obvious reasons, the more nearly this property can be distributed among all the people the better. To favor such general distribution, greater inducements to become owners might, perhaps, with good effect and without injury, be presented to persons of limited means. With this view, I suggest whether it might not be both competent and expedient for Congress to provide that a limited amount of some future issue of public securities might be held by any bona fide purchaser exempt from taxation and from seizure for debt, under such restrictions and limitations as might be necessary to guard against abuse of so important a privilege. This would enable every prudent person to set aside a small annuity against a possible day of want.

Privileges like these would render the possession of such securities, to the amount limited, most desirable to every person of small means who might be able to save enough for the purpose. The great advantage of citizens being creditors as well as debtors, with relation to the public debt, is obvious. Men readily perceive that they cannot be much oppressed by a debt which they owe to themselves.

The public debt on the 1st day of July last, although somewhat exceeding the estimate of the Secretary of the Treasury made to Congress at the commencement of the last session, falls short of the estimate of that officer made in the preceding December, as to its probable amount at the beginning of this year, by the sum of $3,995,097 31. This fact exhibits a satisfactory condition and conduct of the operations of the Treasury.

The national banking system is proving to be acceptable to capitalists and to the people. On the 25th day of November five hundred and eighty-four national banks had been organized, a considerable number of which were conversions from State banks. Changes from State systems to the national system are rapidly taking place, and it is hoped that very soon there will be in the United States no banks of issue not authorized by Congress, and no bank-note circulation not secured by the Government. That the Government and the people will derive great benefit from this change in the banking systems of the country can hardly be questioned. The national system will create a reliable and permanent influence in support of the national credit, and protect the people against losses in the use of paper money. Whether or not any further legislation is advisable for the suppression of State bank issues it will be for Congress to determine. It seems quite clear that the Treasury cannot be satisfactorily conducted unless the Government can exercise a restraining power over the bank-note circulation of the country.

The report of the Secretary of War and the accompanying documents will detail the campaigns of the armies in the field since the date of the last annual message, and also the operations of the several administrative bureaus of the War Department during the last year. It will also specify the measures deemed essential for the national defence, and to keep up and supply the requisite military force.

The report of the Secretary of the Navy presents a comprehensive and satisfactory exhibit of the affairs of that Department and of the naval service. It is a subject of congratulation and laudable pride to our countrymen that a navy of such vast proportions has been organized in so brief a period, and conducted with so much efficiency and success.

The general exhibit of the Navy, including vessels under construction on the 1st of December, 1864, shows a total of 671 vessels, carrying 4,610 guns, and of 510,396 tons, being an actual increase during the year, over and above all losses by shipwreck or in battle, of 83 vessels, 167 guns, and 42,427 tons.

The total number of men at this time in the naval service, including officers, is about 51,000.

There have been captured by the Navy during the year 324 vessels, and the whole number of naval captures since hostilities commenced is 1,379, of which 267 are steamers.

The gross proceeds arising from the sale of condemned prize property, thus far reported, amount to $14,296,250.51. A large amount of such proceeds is still under adjudication, and yet to be reported.

The total expenditure of the Navy Department of every description, including the cost of the immense squadrons that have been called into existence from the 4th of March, 1861, to the 1st of November, 1864, are $233,647,262.35.

Your favorable consideration is invited to the various recommendations of the Secretary of the Navy, especially in regard to a navy-yard and suitable establishment for the construction and repair of iron vessels, and the machinery and armature for our ships, to which reference was made in my last annual message.

Your attention is also invited to the views expressed in the report in relation to the legislation of Congress at its last session in respect to prize on our inland waters.

I cordially concur in the recommendation of the Secretary as to the propriety of creating the new rank of vice admiral in our naval service.

Your attention is invited to the report of the Postmaster General for a detailed account of the operations and financial condition of the Post Office Department.

The postal revenues for the year ending June 30, 1864, amounted to $12,438,253.78, and the expenditures to $12,644,786.20; the excess of expenditures over receipts being $206,532.42.

The views presented by the Postmaster General on the subject of special grants by the government in aid of the establishment of new lines of ocean mail steamships and the policy he recommends for the development of increased commercial intercourse with adjacent and neighboring countries, should receive the careful consideration of Congress.

It is of noteworthy interest that the steady expansion of population, improvement, and governmental institutions over the new and unoccupied portions of our country has scarcely been checked, much less impeded or destroyed, by our great civil war, which at first glance would seem to have absorbed almost the entire energies of the nation.

The organization and admission of the State of Nevada has been completed in conformity with law, and thus our excellent system is firmly established in the mountains which once seemed a barren and uninhabitable waste between the Atlantic States and those which have grown up on the coast of the Pacific ocean.

The Territories of the Union are generally in a condition of prosperity and rapid growth. Idaho and Montana, by reason of their great distance and the interruption of communication with them by Indian hostilities, have been only partially organized; but it is understood that these difficulties are about to disappear, which will permit their governments, like those of the others, to go into speedy and full operation.

As intimately connected with and promotive of this material growth of the nation, I ask the attention of Congress to the valuable information and important recommendations relating to the public lands, Indian affairs, the Pacific railroad, and mineral discoveries contained in the report of the Secretary of the Interior, which is herewith transmitted, and which report also embraces the subjects of patents, pensions, and other topics of public interest pertaining to his Department.

The quantity of public land disposed of during the five quarters ending on the 30th of September last was 4,221,342 acres, of which 1,538,614 acres were entered under the homestead law. The remainder was located with military land warrants, agricultural scrip certified to States for railroads, and sold for cash. The cash received from sales and location fees was $1,019,446.

The income from sales during the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1864, was $678,007.21, against $136,077.95 received during the preceding year. The aggregate number of acres surveyed during the year has been equal to the quantity disposed of; and there is open to settlement about 133,000,000 acres of surveyed land.

The great enterprise of connecting the Atlantic with the Pacific States by railways and telegraph lines has been entered upon with a vigor that gives assurance of success, notwithstanding the embarrassments arising from the prevailing high prices of materials and labor. The route of the main line of the road has been definitely located for one hundred miles westward from the initial point at Omaha City, Nebraska, and a preliminary location of the Pacific railroad of California has been made from Sacramento eastward to the great bend of the Truckee river in Nevada.

Numerous discoveries of gold, silver, and cinnabar mines have been added to the many heretofore known, and the country occupied by the Sierra Nevada and Rocky mountains, and the subordinate ranges, now teems with enterprising labor, which is richly remunerative. It is believed that the product of the mines of precious metals in that region has, during the year, reached, if not exceeded, one hundred millions in value.

It was recommended in my last annual message that our Indian system be remodeled. Congress, at its last session, acting upon the recommendation, did provide for reorganizing the system in California, and it is believed that under the present organization the management of the Indians there will be attended with reasonable success. Much yet remains to be done to provide for the proper government of the Indians in other parts of the country to render it secure for the advancing settler and to provide for the welfare of the Indian. The Secretary reiterates his recommendations, and to them the attention of Congress is invited.

The liberal provisions made by Congress for paying pensions to invalid soldiers and sailors of the Republic, and to the widows, orphans, and dependent mothers of those who have fallen in battle, or died of disease contracted or of wounds received in the service of their country, have been diligently administered. There have been added to the pension rolls, during the year ending the 30th day of June last, the names of 16,770 invalid soldiers and of 271 disabled seamen, making the present number of army invalid pensioners 22,767, and of navy invalid pensioners 712.

Of widows, orphans, and mothers, 22,198 have been placed on the army pension rolls, and 248 on the navy rolls. The present number of army pensioners of this class is 25,453, and of the navy pensioners 793. At the beginning of the year the number of revolutionary pensioners was 1,430; only twelve of them were soldiers, of whom seven have since died. The remainder are those who, under the law, receive pensions because of relationship to revolutionary soldiers. During the year ending the 30th of June, 1864, $4,504,616.92 have been paid to pensioners of all classes.

I cheerfully commend to your continued patronage the benevolent institutions of the District of Columbia which have hitherto been established or fostered by Congress, and respectfully refer, for information concerning them, and in relation to the Washington aqueduct, the Capitol, and other matters of local interest, to the report of the Secretary.

The Agricultural Department, under the supervision of its present energetic and faithful head, is rapidly commending itself to the great and vital interest it was created to advance. It is peculiarly the people's Department, in which they feel more directly concerned than in any other. I commend it to the continued attention and fostering care of Congress.

The war continues. Since the last annual message all the important lines and positions then occupied by our forces have been maintained, and our arms have steadily advanced; thus liberating the regions left in the rear, so that Missouri, Kentucky, Tennessee, and parts of other States have again produced reasonably fair crops.

The most remarkable feature in the military operations of the year is General Sherman's attempted march of three hundred miles directly through the insurgent region. It tends to show a great increase of our relative strength that our General-in-Chief should feel able to confront and hold in check every active force of the enemy, and yet to detach a well appointed large army to move on such an expedition. The result not yet being known, conjecture in regard to it is not here indulged.

Important movements have also occurred during the year to the effect of moulding society for durability in the Union. Although short of complete success, it is much in the right direction that twelve thousand citizens in each of the States of Arkansas and Louisiana have organized loyal State governments, with free constitutions, and are earnestly struggling to maintain and administer them. The movements in the same direction, more extensive though less definite, in Missouri, Kentucky, and Tennessee, should not be overlooked. But Maryland presents the example of complete success. Maryland is secure to liberty and Union for all the future. The genius of rebellion will no more claim Maryland. Like another foul spirit, being driven out, it may seek to tear her, but it will woo her no more.

At the last session of Congress a proposed amendment of the Constitution abolishing slavery throughout the United States passed the Senate, but failed for lack of the requisite two-thirds vote in the House of Representatives. Although the present is the same Congress, and nearly the same members, and without questioning the wisdom or patriotism of those who stood in opposition, I venture to recommend the reconsideration and passage of the measure at the present session. Of course the abstract question is not changed; but an intervening election shows, almost certainly, that the next Congress will pass the measure if this does not. Hence there is only a question of time as to when the proposed amendment will go to the States for their action. And as it is to go, at all events, may we not agree that the sooner the better? It is not claimed that the election has imposed a duty on members to change their views or their votes, any further than, as an additional element to be considered, their judgment may be affected by it. It is the voice of the people now, for the first time, heard upon the question. In a great national crisis like ours, unanimity of action among those seeking a common end is very desirable—almost indispensable. And yet no approach to such unanimity is attainable unless some deference shall be paid to the will of the majority simply because it is the will of the majority. In this case the common end is the maintenance of the Union; and, among the means to secure that end, such will, through the election, is most clearly declared in favor of such constitutional amendment.

The most reliable indication of public purpose in this country is derived through our popular elections. Judging by the recent canvass and its result, the purpose of the people within the loyal States to maintain the integrity of the Union was never more firm nor more nearly unanimous than now. The extraordinary calmness and good order with which the millions of voters met and mingled at the polls give strong assurance of this. Not only all those who supported the Union ticket, so-called, but a great majority of the opposing party also, may be fairly claimed to entertain and to be actuated by the same purpose. It is an unanswerable argument to this effect, that no candidate for any office whatever, high or low, has ventured to seek votes on the avowal that he was for giving up the Union. There have been much impugning of motives, and much heated controversy as to the proper means and best mode of advancing the Union cause; but on the distinct issue of Union or no Union the politicians have shown their instinctive knowledge that there is no diversity among the people. In affording the people the fair opportunity of showing, one to another and to the world, this firmness and unanimity of purpose, the election has been of vast value to the national cause.

The election has exhibited another fact not less valuable to be known—the fact that we do not approach exhaustion in the most important branch of national resources—that of living men. While it is melancholy to reflect that the war has filled so many graves and carried mourning to so many hearts, it is some relief to know that, compared with the surviving, the fallen have been so few. While corps and divisions and brigades and regiments have formed and fought and dwindled and gone out of existence, a great majority of the men who composed them are still living. The same is true of the naval service. The election returns prove this. So many voters could not else be found. The States regularly holding elections both now and four years ago, to wit: California, Connecticut, Delaware, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kentucky, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, Ohio, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Vermont, West Virginia, and Wisconsin, cast 3,982,011 votes now against 3,870,222 cast then, showing an aggregate now of 3,982,011. To this is to be added 33,762 cast now in the new States of Kansas and Nevada, which States did not vote in 1860, thus swelling the aggregate to 4,015,773 and the net increase during the three years and a half of war to 145,551. A table is appended showing particulars. To this again should be added the number of all soldiers in the field from Massachusetts, Rhode Island, New Jersey, Delaware, Indiana, Illinois, and California, who, by the laws of those States, could not vote away from their homes, and which number cannot be less than 90,000. Nor yet is this all. The number in organized Territories is pretty now what it was four years ago, while thousands, white and black, join us as the national arms press back the insurgent lines. So much is shown affirmatively and negatively by the election. It is not material to inquire how the increase has been produced or to show that it would have been greater but for the war, which is probably true. The important fact remains demonstrated that we have more men now than we had when the war began; that we are not exhausted nor in process of exhaustion; that we are gaining strength, and may if need be maintain the contest indefinitely. This as to men. Material resources are now more complete and abundant than ever.

The national resources, then, are unexhausted, and, as we believe, inexhaustible. The public purpose to re-establish and maintain the national authority is unchanged, and, as we believe, unchangeable. The manner of continuing the effort remains to choose. On careful consideration of all the evidence accessible, it seems to me that no attempt at negotiation with the insurgent leader could result in any good. He would accept nothing short of severance of the Union—precisely what we will not and cannot give. His declarations to this effect are explicit and oft repeated. He does not attempt to deceive us. He affords us no excuse to deceive ourselves. He cannot voluntarily reaccept the Union; we cannot voluntarily yield it. Between him and us the issue is distinct, simple, and inflexible. It is an issue which can only be tried by war, and decided by victory. If we yield, we are beaten; if the Southern people fail him, he is beaten. Either way, it would be the victory and defeat following war. What is true, however, of him who heads the insurgent cause is not necessarily true of those who follow. Although he cannot reaccept the Union, they can. Some of them, we know, already desire peace and reunion. The number of such may increase. They can at any moment have peace simply by laying down their arms and submitting to the national authority under the Constitution. After so much, the Government could not, if it would, maintain war against them. The loyal people would not sustain or allow it. If questions should remain, we would adjust them by the peaceful means of legislation, conference, courts, and votes, operating only in constitutional and lawful channels. Some certain, and other possible, questions are, and would be, beyond the executive power to adjust; as, for instance, the admission of members into Congress, and whatever might require the appropriation of money. The executive power itself would be greatly diminished by the cessation of actual war. Pardons and remissions of forfeitures, however, would still be within executive control. In what spirit and temper this control would be exercised can be fairly judged of by the past.

A year ago general pardon and amnesty, upon specified terms, were offered to all, except certain designated classes; and it was, at the same time, made known that the excepted classes were still within contemplation of special clemency. During the year many availed themselves of the general provision, and many more would, only that the signs of bad faith in some, led to such precautionary measures as rendered the practical process less easy and certain. During the same time also special pardons have been granted to individuals of the excepted classes, and no voluntary application has been denied. Thus, practically, the door has been, for a full year, open to all, except such as were not in condition to make free choice—that is, such as were in custody or under constraint. It is still so open to all. But the time may come—probably will come—when public duty shall demand that it be closed; and that, in lieu, more rigorous measures than heretofore shall be adopted.

In presenting the abandonment of armed resistance to the national authority on the part of the insurgents, as the only indispensable condition to ending the war on the part of the Government, I retract nothing heretofore said as to slavery. I repeat the declaration made a year ago, that "while I remain in my present position I shall not attempt to retract or modify the emancipation proclamation, nor shall I return to slavery any person who is free by the terms of that proclamation, or by any of the acts of Congress." If the people should, by whatever mode or means, make it an executive duty to re-enslave such persons, another, and not I, must be their instrument to perform it.

In stating a single condition of peace, I mean simply to say that the war will cease on the part of the Government whenever it shall have ceased on the part of those who began it.

Memorandum of Changes in List of Senators and Representatives.

The following changes occurred from the last session:

IN SENATE.

1864, December 5—Nathan A. Farwell, of Maine, qualified as successor of William Pitt Fessenden, resigned to become Secretary of the Treasury. Mr. Fessenden, having been re-elected, resumed his seat March 4, 1865.

1865, February 1—William M. Stewart and James W. Nye took their seats as Senators from Nevada—the former drawing the term to expire March 3, 1867; the latter the term to expire March 3, 1869.

1865, February 13—Thomas Holliday Hicks, of Maryland, died. His successor, John A. J. Creswell, was not qualified until March 10, during the Special Executive Session of the Senate.

IN HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

1864, December 5—Dwight Townsend, of New York, qualified as successor of Henry G. Stebbins, resigned.

1864, December 21—Henry G. Worthington, of Nevada, qualified.

Arrests of Citizens, and the Writ of Habeas Corpus.

ARRESTS OF CITIZENS.

1865, February 18—The Secretary of War, in reply to a resolution of the Senate, of February 14,* sent a report to that body of his action under the act referred to, (see p. 183,) of which these extracts give the substance:

Shortly after the passage of said act, viz, on the 23d of March, 1863, Colonel Holt, Judge Advocate General, the chief law officer of the Department, was, by an order of that date, charged with the execution of the provisions of that act in the following instructions:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
WASHINGTON CITY, March 23, 1863.

COLONEL: I beg you to direct your attention to the provision of the late act of Congress requiring prisoners held under military authority to be released within a certain time, and to ask that proceedings may be taken against such as are not proper to be released, and that you will see that the provisions of that law are observed in regard to all persons held in military custody.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

EDWIN M. STANTON,
Secretary of War.

Hon. J. Holt, Judge Advocate General.

After these instructions, the Judge Advocate General made report, transmitting to this department a list of political prisoners, and reported that "duplicates had been furnished to the judges of the circuit and district courts of the United States, in compliance with the requirements of the act of Congress." His report is as follows:

JUDGE ADVOCATE GENERAL'S OFFICE,
WASHINGTON, June 9, 1863.

SIR: Pursuant to instructions received from you under date of March 23, 1863, I have the honor to transmit herewith lists of political prisoners, of which duplicates have been furnished to the judges of the circuit and district courts of the United States, in compliance with the requirements of the act of Congress of March 3 last, entitled

* On motion of Mr. Powell, unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to inform the Senate whether or not he has furnished the judges of the circuit and district courts of the United States, and of the District of Columbia, a list of the names of the persons held as "State or political prisoners, or otherwise than as prisoners of war, as required by the second section of the act entitled 'An act relating to habeas corpus and regulating judicial proceedings in certain cases,'" approved March 3, 1863.

"An act relating to habeas corpus, and regulating judicial proceedings in certain cases."

Your instructions to me were, "to see that the provisions of that law are observed in regard to all persons held in military custody." For the preparation of the lists required by those provisions, there were furnished me by you rolls of prisoners confined in the Government prisons at St. Louis, Alton, Louisville, Sandusky, Wheeling, Camp Chase, Ohio, Fort Lafayette, Fort McHenry, Fort Delaware, and in the Old Capitol Prison at Washington. In consequence of the late date of your letter of instruction, and of the receipt of the rolls, as well as on account of the pressure of business, the lists have not been furnished within the twenty days specified in the act. This delay, however, cannot affect the privileges of the prisoners in question, as will be seen by a reference to the third section of the act alluded to at the end of this communication.

Most of the rolls furnished are incomplete in view of the requirements of the act, in that they do not state where the offences were committed, or by whose authority the arrests were made, and some of them do not specify, in many cases, what was the offence or charge. The residence of prisoners, however, is generally given, and this, in nearly every case, affords a venue for trial, according to the terms of the act.

It not being generally stated in the rolls by whose authority the arrests which are the subject of this communication were made, it has been presumed (for the purposes of the present lists) that all were made by the authority, either directly or indirectly, of the President, acting through the Secretary of War. In point of fact, however, it is believed that these arrests were generally made by military commanders and provost marshals, without any intervention on the part of the President or Secretary.

A considerable number of the prisoners enumerated in some of the rolls, especially those from the prisons of St. Louis and Alton, are not included in the lists prepared by me for the United States judges. The act does not appear to have been carefully framed, and has been found to be extremely difficult of construction. In view of this fact and of the deficiencies in the rolls, as well as in consideration of the exigencies of the service, the act has been strictly construed by me; and those cases which are clearly triable by court-martial or military commission, and which are being every day thus tried, and readily and summarily disposed of, are not generally included in the lists.

Such are cases of prisoners arrested as "guerrillas" or "bushwhackers," or as being connected with or aiding these. So, too, of those arrested for communicating intelligence to the enemy in the sense of the 57th article of war, and of those taken as spies. It is not believed that it was intended in the act to invite attention to cases of persons charged with purely military offences, or of persons suffering under sentences of military tribunals.

The cases of parties confined under sentences pronounced by military courts previous to the date of the act are, therefore, not contained in the present lists. But the large class of prisoners, in whose case no charge or offence is set forth in the rolls, or who are noted as "awaiting charges," and the numerous class of those who are specified as "confined during the war," (without it being added that they are under sentence,) are both included. The lists also embrace those cases in which the charge is stated in general terms, as by the words "rebel," "disloyal," &c., &c., and further comprise prisoners held as "hostages" merely, or as "refugees."

The construction of the act which has been adopted by me is supported by the consideration that, under its provisions, such construction cannot impair the rights of any prisoner not placed in the lists; for it is provided, in the third section, that in case a prisoner is omitted to be presented by the Secretary to the judge in the formal list, he may obtain, by a process therein prescribed, the judge's order for his discharge upon the same terms as those which govern the case of the prisoners whose names, &c., have been furnished in the list by the Secretary.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. HOLT,
Judge Advocate General.

Hon. E. M. Stanton, Secretary of War.

I have no knowledge or information of any other persons held as State or political prisoners of the United States, by order or authority of the President of the United States, or of the Secretary of State, or of the Secretary of War, in any fort, arsenal, or other place, since the date of the report of the Judge Advocate General.

Prior to the passage of the act approved March 3, 1863, measures had been taken by the Secretary of War to examine and determine the cases of State and political prisoners, by the appointment of commissioners to visit, from time to time, the military prisons, with authority to discharge all cases proper to be discharged. Since the passage of the act, the same course has been pursued in regard to persons arrested by State authorities or subordinate military commanders, without authority from the President, Secretary of State, or Secretary of War.

In some of the military departments persons were occasionally arrested and held in military prisons as State or political prisoners, by order of State executives or local military commanders, without any authority from the President, Secretary of State, or Secretary of War. Although these persons did not come within the terms of the act of Congress, measures were from time to time taken to have all such cases promptly investigated, and the parties released, whenever it could be done without prejudice to the public safety. To that end a commissioner was appointed to investigate all cases of imprisonment at Camp Chase; and a special commission, charged with similar duty, consisting of the honorables Benjamin S. Cowan, Roswell Marsh, and Samuel W. Bostwick, visited the State prisons at Alton, St. Louis, Camp Douglas, and elsewhere in the department of the Missouri.

A special commission, consisting of Judge King and Judge Bond, was also appointed for the examination of prisoners confined at Fort Delaware or elsewhere in the Middle department. General Dix was also directed, by an order, dated the 12th of January, 1864, to investigate the cases of persons arrested and detained in Fort Lafayette and other military prisons in the Eastern department, which have been used, by direction of the President, for the custody of persons seized by naval officers while engaged in blockade running or illicit trade, and which class of prisoners is not specified in the act of Congress of March 3, 1863.

The military prisons in the District of Columbia have been used for the custody of prisoners arrested by the military commanders of this and other Departments, as well as by the Navy Department. On the 1st of February, 1864, Major Turner, Judge Advocate, was directed to investigate all cases of persons arrested and imprisoned in the military prisons of the District of Columbia, and has continued charged with that special duty until the present time.

Frequent inspections of military prisons, in addition to the foregoing measures, have also been made by officers specially assigned to that duty.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

EDWIN M. STANTON,
Secretary of War.

THE PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE.

IN SENATE.

1864, December 19—Mr. POWELL submitted the following resolution, and asked for its present consideration:

Resolved, That the President be requested to communicate to the Senate all information in his possession bearing on the arrest and imprisonment of Colonel Richard J. Jacob, Lieutenant Governor of the State of Kentucky, and Col. Frank Woolford, one of the Presidential electors of that State; particularly by whose order they were arrested and imprisoned, where they are at present confined, and what offences are charged against them.

December 20—Resolution amended by inserting after the word "Senate," the words "if not in his opinion incompatible with the public interest," and adopted.

1865, January 31—The President responded, giving papers on the subject.

IN HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

1864, December 15—Mr. MALLORY offered a similar resolution, but, being objected to, it went over under the rules.

1865, January 10—Mr. KERNAN, by unanimous consent, introduced the following resolution, which was agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be, and the same is directed to inquire and report to the House what legislation or action, if any, is necessary to secure to persons arrested and imprisoned by military authority a prompt examination into the cause of their arrest, and their discharge if there be no adequate cause for their detention, and a speedy trial where there is such cause.

1865, January 18—Mr. GANSON, by unanimous consent, introduced the following resolution, which was agreed to:

Resolved, That the Military Committee be, and they are hereby, directed to ascertain and report to this House as soon as possible the number of persons now confined in the Old Capitol and Carroll prisons; when such persons were respectively arrested and confined, and upon what charges their arrests were made; whether any of such persons are officers of the Army, and have been confined without a trial beyond the time in that respect prescribed by law or by the regulations in the military service; and whether any persons so in prison are confined without any written charges made against them; and whether there are any persons now in said prisons who have not had any trial; if so, report the names of such persons, the time when they were arrested, and the alleged cause of their arrest respectively; and that the said committee be, and they are hereby, authorized to send for persons and papers.

Mr. STEVENS subsequently moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted. Mr. GARFIELD moved to lay this motion on the table, which was agreed to—yeas, 136, nays 5, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Ancona, Arnold, Ashley, Bailey, Augustus C. Baldwin, John D. Baldwin, Baxter, Beaman, Blaine, Blair, Bliss, Boutwell, Boyd, Brandegee, Brooks, Broomall, James S. No report appears to have been made.

1865, January 30—Mr. ELDRIDGE asked, but failed to obtain, leave to offer this resolution:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be respectfully requested, and the Secretary of State and Secretary of War be directed, to report and furnish to this House the names of the persons, if any there are, who have been arrested and are now held in imprisonment or confinement in any prison, fort, or other place whatsoever, for political offences, or any other alleged offence against the Government or authority of the United States by the order, command, consent, or knowledge of any of them, or either of them respectively, and who have not been charged, tried, or convicted before any civil or criminal (not military) court of the land, together with the charge against such person, or cause for such arrest and imprisonment, excepting only such persons as may, at the time of their arrest, have been in the military or naval service of the United States, together with the name of the prison, fort, or place where they are severally kept or confined; also whether any person or persons, for any alleged like offence, have been banished or sent from the United States, or those not in rebellion to the rebellious States, the names, times, alleged offences, and causes thereof; and whether with or without trial; and if tried, before what court.

February 20—It being before the House, a motion to table it was lost—yeas 54, nays 58, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ames, Ashley, Baxter, Beaman, Blair, Boutwell, Broomall, Ambrose W. Clark, Freeman Clarke, Cobb, Cole, Thomas T. A decisive vote upon it was not taken—other business having intervened.

1865, March 2—The Miscellaneous Appropriation bill being before the Committee of the Whole,

Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland, moved the following amendment as an additional section :

Sec. —. And be it further enacted, That no person shall be tried by court-martial, or military commission, in any State or Territory where the courts of the United States are open, except persons actually mustered, or commissioned, or appointed in the military or naval service of the United States, or rebel enemies charged with being spies; and all proceedings heretofore had contrary to this provision are vacated; and all persons not subject to trial, under this act, by court-martial or military commission, now held under sentence thereof, shall be forthwith discharged or delivered to the civil authorities to be proceeded against before the courts of the United States according to law; and all acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

Mr. SCHENCK moved to amend by striking out all after the word "spies," as follows :

And all proceedings heretofore had contrary to this provision are vacated; and all persons not subject to trial, under this act, by court-martial or military commission, now held under sentence thereof, shall be forthwith discharged or delivered to the civil authorities to be proceeded against before the courts of the United States according to law; and all acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

Mr. YEAMAN. I ask my friend from Ohio [Mr. Schenck] to accept the following as an addition to his amendment, to be inserted in lieu of what he proposes to strike out :

Or enemies charged with a violation of the laws of war.

Mr. SCHENCK. That is for guerrillas?

Mr. YEAMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. SCHENCK. I will modify my amendment so as to make it to strike out all of the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. Davis] after the word "spies," and insert what the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Yeaman] has proposed.

Mr. KASSON suggested this substitute, which Mr. Davis declined to accept :

That no person shall hereafter be tried by court-martial or military commission in any State or Territory where the courts of the United States are open for any charge not specified as an offence by military or civil law, nor for offences cognizable in said courts and punishable by existing civil law, except they are persons actually mustered or commissioned or appointed in the military or naval service of the United States, or rebel enemies, or spies, or conspirators in aid of the rebellion against the United States who are charged with being spies, or with being the violators of military law.

Mr. DAVIS subsequently consented to strike from his amendment the words, "discharged or."

Mr. SCHENCK's amendment was rejected—ayes 53, nays 71.

Mr. DAVIS's amendment was agreed to—ayes 75, nays 64.

Mr. YEAMAN moved to add this proviso to Mr. Davis's amendment, but withdrew it on being refused permission to explain it :

Provided, That in cases of murder, arson, larceny, robbery, malicious arrest, false imprisonment, assault and battery, maiming, shooting, or stabbing with intent to kill, done by the enemies of the United States, or those in armed hostility to the laws thereof, the circuit and district courts of the United States, and commissioners of the United States, shall have as full and complete jurisdiction as the several courts of the States where any of said crimes may be done, with power to inflict the same punishments: And provided further, That nothing in this act shall be construed to prevent or restrict courts-martial of their jurisdiction of offenses against the laws and usages of war, committed by persons in armed rebellion to the laws of the United States.

Mr. JENCKES moved to add after the word "spies," the words "or guerrillas;" which was agreed to.

The bill having been reported from the Committee of the Whole with sundry amendments, Mr. DAVIS moved to amend the amendment adopted on his motion by the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, by striking out all after the word "spies," as follows :

Or guerrillas; and all proceedings heretofore had contrary to this provision are vacated, and all persons not subject to trial under this act by courts-martial or military commissions now held under sentence thereof, shall be forthwith delivered to the civil authorities to be proceeded against before the courts of the United States according to law; and all acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

So that the clause will read :

And be it further enacted, That no person shall be tried by court-martial or military commission in any State or Territory where the courts of the United States are open, except persons actually mustered, or commissioned, or appointed in the military or naval service of the United States, or rebel emissaries charged with being spies.

Which was agreed to—ayes 78, nays 71, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. James C. Allen, Ancona, Augustus C. Baldwin, Beaman, Bliss, Boutwell, Brandegee, Brooks, Broomall, Coffroth, Cox, Cravens, Henry Winter Davis, Dawes, Dawson, Deming, Dixon, Eden, Eldridge, Eliot, English, Ganson, Garfield, Gooch, Grider, Griswold, Hale, Harding, Benjamin G. Rice, Edward H. Rollins, Shannon, Sloan, Spalding, Stevens, Stiles, Thayer, Thomas, Elihu B. Washburne, Wilson, Windom, Woodbridge, Worthington, Yeaman—71.

The amendment as amended was then agreed to—ayes 80, nays 64, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. *James C. Allen, Ancona, Augustus C. Baldwin, Bliss, Boutwell, Brandegee, Brooks, Broomall, James S. Brown, Chanler, Coffroth, Cox, Cravens, Henry Winter Davis, Dawes, Dawson, Deming, Denison, Dixon, Eden, Edgerton, Eldridge, English, Finck, Ganson, Garfield, Gooch, Grider, Griswold, Hale, Harding, Benjamin G. Rice, Scofield, Shannon, Sloan, Spalding, Stevens, Thayer, Thomas, Upson, Ellihu B. Washburne, William B. Washburn, Wilson, Windom, Woodbridge, Worthington—64.

The Appropriation bill then passed the House—yeas 92, nays 41.

IN SENATE.

March 3—Mr. TRUMBULL moved to amend the amendment so that it would read:

That no person shall be tried by court-martial or military commission in any State or Territory where the courts of the United States are open, except persons employed, drafted, enlisted, or actually mustered or commissioned or appointed in the military or naval service of the United States, or rebel enemies charged with being spies.

Which was agreed to—yeas 25, nays 4 as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Buckalew, Clark, Cowan, Davis, Farwell, Foster, Grimes, Hale, Hendricks, Johnson, Lane of Indiana, McDougall, Morgan, Morrill, Nesmith, Powell, Ramsey, Riddle, Sprague, Sumner, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wade, Wilson—25.

NAYS—Messrs. Conness, Howard, Nye, Stewart—4.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana, moved to strike out the section as amended, which was agreed to—yeas 20, nays 14, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Chandler, Clark, Conness, Farwell, Foster, Grimes, Harlan, Howard, Howe, Lane of Indiana, Morgan, Morrill, Nye, Ramsey, Stewart, Sumner, Wilkinson, Wilson—20.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Cowan, Davis, Hale, Hendricks, Johnson, McDougall, Nesmith, Powell, Riddle, Sprague, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wade—14.

The bill then passed—yeas 26, nays 5.

The House insisted on its action; and a Committee of Conference reported an agreement upon all the points of disagreement, except with regard to arrests; but the hour of adjournment arrived before either House acted on the report, and the bill fell.

BAIL IN CERTAIN CASES OF ARREST.

February 24—Mr. TRUMBULL moved to take up Senate bill providing for bail in certain cases of military arrests.

It provides that contractors, who, by the sixteenth section of the act of July 17, 1862, are made subject to trial by military tribunals, should be allowed bail when arrested.

Mr. POWELL offered this as a new section:

That any officer in the executive, military, or naval service of the United States, who shall arrest or cause to be arrested, any person or persons not engaged in the military or naval service of the United States, and who is not engaged in the rebellion against the United States, shall immediately hand the person or persons so arrested over to the civil authorities to have the case investigated and the parties so arrested tried according to law. Any officer engaged in the executive, naval, or military service of the United States, who shall violate this section, shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and, upon indictment and conviction thereof in any court of the United States having jurisdiction to try and punish such cases, shall be punished by a fine of not less than $500 and not exceeding $10,000, and confinement in the penitentiary of not less than one year, nor more than five years, in the discretion of the court trying the same: Provided, That nothing in this section shall be so construed as to prevent any officer who shall make an unlawful arrest from being prosecuted in a civil suit for damages for such unlawful arrest.

The subject was debated and laid aside, and not again reached.

HABEAS CORPUS.

1865, February 11—Before the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, in the case of Christopher V. Hogan, confined in the Old Capitol prison, (upon charges of implication in the robbery of a paymaster.) on whose behalf a writ of habeas corpus was issued, the following return was made by William P. Wood, the keeper of the prison:

That the body of Hogan is in my possession; that he was arrested and imprisoned by authority of the President of the United States; and that I do not produce this body by reason of the order of the President of the United States, endorsed upon said writ, to which reference is hereby respectfully made.

The endorsement of the President is:

The within-named Christopher Hogan was arrested and is imprisoned by my authority. This writ of habeas corpus is suspended, and the officer having Hogan in custody is directed not to produce his body, but hold him in custody until further order, giving this order in your return to the court. A. LINCOLN.

January 23, 1865.

In the argument it was contended that the 2d section of the act of March 3, 1863, contained restrictions on the power of suspension, one of which was that if a regular term of the proper United States court should come and go without an indictment being found against the prisoner, he was entitled to discharge on habeas corpus. The Court unanimously overruled the point, Justice Olin delivering the opinion. Justice Wylic dissented from the reasoning of the opinion, though concurring in the opinion.

IN HOUSE.

1865, February 11—Mr. LE BLOND introduced a bill to repeal "An act relating to habeas corpus, and regulating judicial proceedings in certain cases;" which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

February 16—Reported unfavorably from the Committee, by Mr. WILSON.

PUNISHMENT OF AN EDITOR.

The following paragraph appeared in the public papers, telegraphed from Trenton, N. J., February 15, 1865:

In the United States Court, E. N. Fuller, editor of The Newark Journal, was fined $100 for publishing articles against the United States Enrollment Law. He pleaded guilty and made a statement to the Court which mitigated his offence.

Confiscation.

In continuation of the record on pages 195—203, and 260, it should be stated that the proposition to repeal the clause limiting confiscation to life-estate was a part of the first report of the Committee of Conference on the Freedmen's bill; which was rejected in the Senate, February 22, 1865, (for which, see beyond.) There was no direct vote on the naked proposition in the Senate, and no other vote involving it in the second session of the Thirty-eighth Congress; but these proceedings took place:

IN HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

1865, February 22—Mr. WILLIAMS, from the Judiciary Committee, reported this bill:

That so much of the joint resolution explanatory of "An act to suppress insurrection, to punish treason and rebellion, to seize and confiscate the property of rebels, and for other purposes," approved July seventeenth, eighteen hundred and sixty-two, as prohibits the forfeiture of the real estate of rebels beyond their natural lives, be, and the same is hereby repealed.

Sec. 2. That this act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage.

February 23—Mr. HOLMAN moved that it be tabled; which was lost—yeas 52, nays 61. On ordering it to be engrossed and read a third time, the yeas were 67, nays 54. A motion by Mr. Cox to table it, when on final passage, was lost—yeas 68, nays 68, the Speaker voting nay. The bill then passed—yeas 73, nays 72, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Ashley, John D. Baldwin, Baxter, Beaman, Blaine, Boutwell, Boyd, Brandegee, Broomall, Ambrose W. Clark, Freeman Clarke, Cobb, Cole, Thomas T. This bill was not reached in the Senate.

Military Legislation.

AMENDMENT TO THE ENROLLMENT BILL.

The Enrollment Act of March 3, 1865, though lengthy, contains no new principle, and is devoted to details. One section (the 22d) repeats the 3d section of the act of July 4, 1864, which authorized the Governors of loyal States to send recruiting agents to certain of the rebellious States,* (see p. 117.) It passed as reported from the Committee of Conference:

IN SENATE,

Without a division.

IN HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

The vote was—yeas 72, nays 56, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Arnold, Ashley, Bailey, John D. Baldwin, Baxter, Beaman, Elow, Boutwell, Broomall, Ambrose W. Clark, Freeman Clarke, Cobb, Cole, Creswell, Henry Winter Davis, Thomas T. Davis, Dawes, Dixon, Driggs, Eckley, Eliot, Garfield, Gooch, Griswold, Higby, Asahel W. Hubbard, John H. Washburne, Whaley, Chilton A. White—56.

During the consideration of the general question, these votes were taken:

IN SENATE.

CIVIL INSTEAD OF MILITARY COURTS.

February 7—Mr. COWAN offered an amendment to the effect that recruiting agents, substitute brokers, or other persons enlisting any insane person, &c., shall be fined and imprisoned upon conviction by any "court of the United States having competent jurisdiction," instead of by a "court martial or military commission," as the section was reported from the Military Committee; which was agreed to—yeas 29, nays 14, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Carlile, Cowan, Davis, Dixon, Doolittle, Farwell, Foot, Foster, Hale, Harlan, Harris, Henderson, Hendricks, Howe, Johnson, Lane of Kansas, Morgan, Nesmith, Pomeroy, Powell, Richardson, Riddle, Sautsbury, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Willey, Wright—29.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Chandler, Clark, Conness, Grimes, Howard, Morrill, Nye, Ramsey, Sherman, Stewart, Sumner, Wilson—14.

NO SUBSTITUTION.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas, moved as a substitute for the first section:

That all acts and parts of acts now in force providing for substitutions, or regulating the substitution of another for a person drafted into the military service, be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Which was rejected—yeas 7, nays 31, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Brown, Doolittle, Grimes, Howe, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, Ramsey—7.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Buckalew, Clark, Collamer, Conness, Cowan, Davis, Dixon, Farwell, Foot, Foster, Hale, Harlan, Harris, Henderson, Hendricks, Johnson, Morgan, Morrill, Pomeroy, Powell, Riddle, Sherman, Stewart, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Willey, Wilson, Wright—31.

EXEMPTION OF OFFICIALS.

Mr. HENDRICKS offered an additional section:

That the heads of Executive Departments, judges of the courts of the United States, and members of Congress, during their term of service, shall be exempt from military duty.

Which was rejected—yeas 9, nays 27, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Brown, Buckalew, Davis, Hendricks, Pomeroy, Powell, Riddle, Trumbull, Wright—9.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Chandler, Clark, Conness, Cowan, Dixon, Farwell, Foot, Foster, Grimes, Harlan, Harris, Henderson, Howard, Johnson, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, Morgan, Morrill, Ramsey, Sherman, Stewart, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Van Winkle, Willey, Wilson—27.

IN HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TO REPEAL ALL CONSCRIPTION LAWS.

February 27—Mr. CHANLER, of New York, offered this section as an addition to the 13th section of the House bill:

That so much of all acts or parts of acts entitled acts to regulate and provide for enrolling and calling out the national forces, and for other purposes, as authorize the President of the United States to raise troops by conscription be, and hereby are, repealed; and that all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this section be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Which was not agreed to—yeas 27, nays 95, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ancona, Brooks, Chanler, Clay, Denison, Eden, Edgerton, Ellbridge, Benjamin G. Harris, Le Blond, Long, Mallory, William H. Miller, Morrison, Noble, John O'Neill, Puddleton, Perry, Pruyn, Rogers, Ross, Stiles, Srouse, Townsend, Wadsworth, Chilton A. White, Joseph W. White—27.

RESOLUTIONS CONCERNING ENROLLMENT.

IN SENATE.

1864, December 15—Mr. BROWN offered the following, which was agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia be, and they are hereby, instructed to inquire into the expediency of so amending the act of Congress of March 8, 1792, entitled "An act more effectually to provide for the national defence by establishing a uniform militia throughout the United States," and also the several acts amendatory of the same, as shall provide for the enrollment of all male citizens between the ages of eighteen and forty-five, resident in the respective States, without respect to color; and also to submit such other provisions as may tend more efficiently to organize the militia system of the United States, and report by bill or otherwise.

IN HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

EXEMPTION OF THE CLERGY.

1865, February 6—Mr. PRICE, by unanimous consent, introduced the following, which was adopted:

Whereas the genius and policy of our Government is opposed to making distinctions between religious denominations, but guarantees equal protection to all and exclusive privileges to none; and whereas it is alleged that certain preachers of the gospel, belonging to some of the churches whose religious tenets do not bring them within the scope of the act of February, 1864, for "enrolling and calling out the national forces," have, since the passage of said act, been exempted from military duty after being drafted, without complying with section seventeen of said law: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to inform this House whether any privileges have been granted to the preachers of any denomination of professing Christians which have been denied to others, and if so, what denomination these persons belonged to, and also their names and place of residence, with the reasons for making such distinction.

February 8—The Secretary of War sent this reply:

WAR DEPARTMENT,

WASHINGTON CITY, February 7, 1865.

Sir: I have the honor to transmit herewith the report of the Provost Marshal General in answer to the resolution of the House of Representatives of the 6th instant, in relation to preachers of the gospel. I have no information upon the subject referred to in the resolution except that contained in the report of the Provost Marshal General, and do not know of any privileges having been granted to preachers of any denomination of professing Christians that have been denied to other denominations.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

EDWIN M. STANTON,
Secretary of War.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
PROVOST MARSHAL GENERAL'S BUREAU,
WASHINGTON, D. C., February 7, 1865.

Sir: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of a resolution of the House of Representatives, dated February 6, 1865, wherein the Secretary of War is "directed to inform this House whether any privileges have been granted to the preachers of any denomination of professing Christians which have been denied to others, and if so, what denomination these persons belonged to, and also their names and place of residence, with the reasons for making such distinction."

In reply I have the honor to state that I know of no instance in which boards of enrollment have exempted preachers of the gospel belonging to churches "whose religious tenets do not bring them within the scope of the act of February, 1864, for enrolling and calling out the national forces," nor do I know of any "privileges having been granted to the preachers of any denomination of professing Christians which have been denied to others."

I have the honor to be, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JAMES B. FRY,
Provost Marshal General.

CONFISCATION OF PROPERTY OF DESERTERS.

1864, December 21—Mr. GRINNELL asked, but failed to obtain, leave to offer this:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be instructed to report at an early day upon the expediency of a law to confiscate for the Government, when practicable, so much of the property of conscripts who have failed to report for duty as may be required to secure the services of a soldier in their stead.

1865, January 7—Mr. G. offered the resolution, and it was passed.

FREEDOM OF SOLDIERS' FAMILIES.

IN SENATE.

1865, January 9—A joint resolution passed,* with these provisions:

That the wife and children, if any he have, of any person that has been, or may be, mustered into the military or naval service of the United States, shall, from and after its passage, be forever free, any law, usage, or custom whatsoever to the contrary notwithstanding; and in determining who is or was the wife and who are the children of an enlisted person, evidence that he and the woman claimed to be his wife have cohabited together, or associated as husband and wife, and so continued to cohabit or associate at the time of the enlistment, or evidence that a form or ceremony of marriage (whether such marriage was or was not authorized or recognized by law) has been entered into or celebrated by them, and that the parties thereto thereafter lived together, or associated or cohabited as husband and wife, and so continued to live, cohabit or associate at the time of the enlistment, shall be deemed sufficient proof of marriage, and the children born of any such marriage shall be deemed and taken to be the children embraced within the provisions of the act, whether such marriage shall or shall not have been dissolved at the time of such enlistment.

* HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF KENTUCKY,
LOUISVILLE, KY., March 12, 1865.

[General Orders No. 10.]

The General commanding announces to the colored men of Kentucky that, by an act of Congress passed on the 3d day of March, 1865, the wives and children of all colored men who have heretofore enlisted, or who may hereafter enlist, in the military service of the Government, are made free.

This act of justice to the soldiers claims from them renewed efforts, by courage, fortitude, and discipline, to win a good name, to be shared by a free wife and free children. To colored men not in the army it offers an opportunity to coin freedom for themselves and their posterity.

The rights secured to colored soldiers under this law will, if necessary, be enforced by the military authorities of this Department; and it is expected that the loyal men and women of Kentucky will encourage colored men to enlist in the army, and, after they have done so, recognize them as upholders of their government and defenders of their homes, and exercise towards the helpless women and children made free by this law that benevolence and charity which has always characterized the people of the State.

By command of Major General PALMER:

J. P. WATSON,
Capt. and A. A. A. G.

COMPENSATION FOR ENLISTED SLAVES.

IN SENATE.

1865, January 25—The following resolution, offered by Mr. POWELL, was adopted :

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to inform the Senate whether or not he has appointed a commission in each of the slave States represented in Congress "charged to award to each loyal person to whom a colored volunteer may owe service a just compensation, not exceeding $300, for each colored volunteer," as required by the twenty-fourth section of the act approved February 24, 1864, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act for enrolling and calling out the national forces, and for other purposes,' approved March 3, 1863;" and if he has not appointed said commission, that he inform the Senate why he has not done so.

IN HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

1865, January 17—Mr. GRIDER submitted the following resolution, which was agreed to :

Resolved, That the Secretary of War is respectfully requested to communicate to this House whether he has, according to the law approved February 24, 1864, appointed a commissioner in each of the slave States represented in Congress, to be charged with the duty to award to each loyal person, to whom a colored volunteer may owe service, "a just compensation, not exceeding $300," for each such colored volunteer, to be paid out of the fund derived from commutation money.

Resolved further, That he state as near as may be, the amount of said fund, and what further sum will probably be necessary to meet the requisitions of said law.

January 25—The Secretary replied :

WAR DEPARTMENT.

WASHINGTON CITY, January 25, 1865.

SIR: In answer to the resolution of the House of Representatives dated the 17th instant, in relation to the appointment of commissioners in the slave States, to award to the owners of slaves enlisted as volunteers compensation for their services, I have the honor to say, in reply to the first branch of the inquiry, that commissioners have been appointed in the States of Maryland and Delaware, and that in the other slave States, by the President's direction, no appointments have yet been made.

In answer to the second branch of the resolution, I have the honor to state that the amount of the commutation fund is reported by the provost marshal to be $12,170,663 45, a portion of which has been assigned for the payment of bounties required in raising new troops. It is believed, however, that there will be sufficient to pay to the owners of slaves the sum allowed by the act of Congress.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

EDWIN M. STANTON,
Secretary of War.

1865, February 16—Mr. GRIDER asked unanimous consent to introduce the following resolution :

Resolved, That the President of the United States be respectfully requested, if not inconsistent with the public interest, to communicate to the House why commissioners have not been appointed by the Secretary of War, according to the provisions of a bill approved July, 1864, providing for the valuation of slaves enlisted in the United States army in the States of Kentucky and Missouri.

Mr. STEVENS objected.

UNEMPLOYED GENERALS.

1864, December 14—The House passed a bill similar to that mentioned on page 285, with the addition of a section providing that, during the war, the provisions of the section shall be applied each month to the general officers—yeas 99, nays 38, as follows :

VOTES OF THANKS.

Congress passed several joint resolutions, tendering thanks to army and navy officers commanding, and to officers and men under their command, upon which there was generally no division called. But in the House, January 25, 1865, on a resolution thanking Major General Philip H. Sheridan, and the officers and men under his command, for the gallantry, military skill, and courage displayed in the then recent battles in the Shenandoah Valley, and especially for their services at Cedar Run, October 19, 1864, which retrieved the fortunes of the day, the yeas and nays were called, and were—yeas 131, nays 2, as follows:

THE HAMPTON ROADS CONFERENCE.

1865, February 10—These messages from President LINCOLN were received and read:

MESSAGE TO THE HOUSE.

To the Honorable the House of Representatives:

In response to your resolution of the 8th instant,* requesting information in relation to a conference recently held in Hampton Roads, I have the honor to state, that on the day of the date I gave Francis P. Blair, Senior, a card, written on as follows, to wit:

Allow the bearer, F. P. Blair, Senior, to pass our lines, go south, and return.
A. LINCOLN.
December 28, 1864.

That at the time I was informed that Mr. Blair sought the card as a means of getting to Richmond, Virginia; but he was given no authority to speak or act for the government, nor was I informed of anything he would say or do on his own account, or otherwise. Afterwards Mr. Blair told me that he had been to Richmond, and had seen Mr. Jefferson Davis; and he (Mr. B.) at the same time left with me a manuscript letter, as follows, to wit:

RICHMOND, Va., January 12, 1865.

SIR: I have deemed it proper, and probably desirable to you, to give you, in this form the substance of remarks made by me, to be repeated by you to President Lincoln, &c., &c.

I have no disposition to find obstacles in forms, and am willing, now as heretofore, to enter into negotiations for the restoration of peace: and am ready to send a commission whenever I have reason to suppose it will be received, or to receive a commission, if the United States Government shall choose to send one. That, notwithstanding the rejection of our former offers, I would, if you could promise that a commissioner, minister, or other agent would be received, appoint one immediately, and renew the effort to enter into conference, with a view to secure peace to the two countries.

Yours, &c.,
F. P. BLAIR, Esq.
JEFFERSON DAVIS.

Afterwards, and with the view that it should be shown to Mr. Davis, I wrote and delivered to Mr. Blair a letter, as follows, to wit:

WASHINGTON, January 18, 1865.

SIR: Your having shown me Mr. Davis's letter to you of the 12th instant, you may say to him that I have constantly been, am now, and shall continue ready to receive any agent whom he, or any other influential person now resisting the national authority, may informally send to me, with the view of securing peace to the people of our one common country.

Yours, &c.,
F. P. BLAIR, Esq.
A. LINCOLN.

Afterwards Mr. Blair dictated for and authorized me to make an entry on the back of my retained copy of the letter last above recited, which entry is as follows:

JANUARY 28, 1865.

To-day Mr. Blair tells me that on the 21st instant he delivered to Mr. Davis the original, of which the within is a copy, and left it with him: that at the time of delivering it Mr. Davis read it over twice in Mr. Blair's presence, at the close of which he (Mr. Blair) remarked that the part about "our one common country" related to the part of Mr. Davis's letter about "the two countries," to which Mr. Davis replied that he so understood it.

A. LINCOLN.

Afterwards the Secretary of War placed in

* The resolution was offered by Mr. STEVENS, and is as follows:

Resolved, That the President be requested to communicate to this House such information as he may deem not incompatible with the public interest relative to the recent conference between himself and the Secretary of State and Messrs. Stephens, Hunter, and Campbell, in Hampton Roads.

my hands the following telegram, indorsed by him as appears :

OFFICE UNITED STATES MILITARY TELEGRAPH,
WAR DEPARTMENT.

The following telegram received at Washington, January 29, 1865, from headquarters Army of James, 6.30 P. M., January 29, 1865:

The following despatch just received from Major General Parke, who refers it to me for my action. I refer it to you in Lieutenant General Grant's absence.

E. O. C. ORD,

Major General Commanding.

Hon. EDWIN M. STANTON, Secretary of War.

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF POTOMAC,
4 P. M., January 29, 1865.

The following despatch is forwarded to you for your action. Since I have no knowledge of General Grant's having had any understanding of this kind, I refer the matter to you as the ranking officer present in the two armies.

JNO. G. PARKE,

Major General Commanding.

Major General E. O. C. ORD,

Headquarters Army of the James.

FROM HEADQUARTERS NINTH ARMY CORPS, 29th.

Alex. H. Stephens, R. M. T. Hunter, and J. A. Campbell desire to cross my lines, in accordance with an understanding claimed to exist with Lieutenant General Grant, on their way to Washington as peace commissioners. Shall they be admitted? They desire an early answer, to come through immediately. Would like to reach City Point to-night, if they can. If they cannot do this, they would like to come through at 10 A. M. to-morrow morning.

O. B. WILCOX,

Major General Commanding 9th Corps.

Major General JNO. G. PARKE,

Headquarters Army of Potomac.

Respectfully referred to the President for such instructions as he may be pleased to give.

EDWIN M. STANTON,

Secretary of War.

January 29—8.30 P. M.

It appears that about the time of placing the foregoing telegram in my hands, the Secretary of War despatched General Ord, as follows, to wit :

[Sent in cipher at 2 A. M., 30th.]

WAR DEPARTMENT,

WASHINGTON CITY, January 29, 1865—10 P. M.

SIR : This Department has no knowledge of any understanding by General Grant to allow any person to come within his lines as commissioner of any sort. You will therefore allow no one to come into your lines under such character or profession, until you receive the President's instructions, to whom your telegram will be submitted for his directions.

EDWIN M. STANTON,

Secretary of War.

Major General ORD.

Afterwards, by my direction, the Secretary of War telegraphed General Ord as follows, to wit :

WAR DEPARTMENT,

WASHINGTON, D. C., 10.30 A. M., January 30, 1865.

SIR : By direction of the President, you are instructed to inform the three gentlemen, Messrs. Stephens, Hunter, and Campbell, that a messenger will be despatched to them at or near where they now are without unnecessary delay.

EDWIN M. STANTON,

Secretary of War.

Major General E. O. C. ORD,

Headquarters Army of the James.

Afterwards I prepared and put into the hands of Major Thomas T. Eckert the following instructions and message :

EXECUTIVE MANSION,

WASHINGTON, January 30, 1865.

SIR : You will proceed with the documents placed in your hands, and, on reaching General Ord, will deliver him the letter addressed to him by the Secretary of War; then, by General Ord's assistance, procure an interview with Messrs. Stephens, Hunter, and Campbell, or any of them. Deliver to him or them the paper on which your own letter is written. Note on the copy which you retain the time of delivery, and to whom delivered. Receive their answer in writing, waiting a reasonable time for it, and which, if it contain their decision to come through, without further condition, will be your warrant to ask General Ord to pass them through, as directed in the letter of the Secretary of War to him. If, by their answer, they decline to come, or propose other terms, do not have them passed through. And this being your whole duty, return and report to me.

Yours truly,

A. LINCOLN.

Major T. T. ECKERT.

MESSRS. ALEX. H. STEPHENS, J. A. CAMPBELL, and R. M. T. HUNTER:

GENTLEMEN: I am instructed by the President of the United States to place this paper in your hands, with the information that if you pass through the United States military lines, it will be understood that you do so for the purpose of an informal conference, on the basis of the letter, a copy of which is on the reverse side of this sheet, and that, if you choose to pass on such understanding, and so notify me in writing, I will procure the commanding general to pass you through the lines and to Fortress Monroe, under such military precautions as he may deem prudent, and at which place you will be met in due time by some person or persons, for the purpose of such informal conference; and, further, that you shall have protection, safe conduct, and safe return in all events.

THOMAS T. ECKERT,

Major and Aide-de-Camp.

CITY POINT, Va., February 1, 1865.

WASHINGTON, January 18, 1865.

SIR: Your having shown me Mr. Davis's letter to you of the 12th instant, you may say to him that I have constantly been, am now, and shall continue ready to receive any agent whom he, or any other influential person now resisting the national authority, may informally send to me, with the view of securing peace to the people of our one common country.

Yours, &c.,

A. LINCOLN.

F. P. BLAIR, Esq.

Afterwards, but before Major Eckert had departed, the following despatch was received from General Grant :

[Cipher.]

OFFICE UNITED STATES MILITARY TELEGRAPH,
WAR DEPARTMENT.

The following telegram, received at Washington, January 31, 1865. From City Point, Va., 10.30 A. M., January 30, 1865.

HIS EXCELLENCY ABRAHAM LINCOLN,

President of the United States :

The following communication was received here last evening:

PETERSBURG, VIRGINIA, January 30, 1865.

SIR: We desire to pass your lines under safe conduct, and to proceed to Washington, to hold a conference with President Lincoln upon the subject of the existing war, and with a view of ascertaining upon what terms it may be terminated, in pursuance of the course indicated by him in his letter to Mr. Blair of January 18, 1865, of which we presume you have a copy, and if not we wish to see you in person, if convenient, and to confer with you upon the subject. Very respectfully yours,

ALEXANDER H. STEPHENS.

J. A. CAMPBELL.

R. M. T. HUNTER.

Lieutenant General U. S. GRANT,

Commanding Armies United States.

I have sent directions to receive these gentlemen, and expect to have them at my quarters this evening, awaiting your instructions.

U. S. GRANT,

Lieut. Gen'l Commanding Armies U. S.

This, it will be perceived, transferred General Ord's agency in the matter to General Grant. I resolved, however, to send Major Eckert forward with his message, and accordingly telegraphed General Grant as follows, to wit:

EXECUTIVE MANSION,

WASHINGTON, January, 31, 1865.

Lieutenant General GRANT, City Point, Va. :

A messenger is coming to you on the business contained in your despatch. Detain the gentlemen in comfortable quarters until he arrives, and then act upon the message he brings as far as applicable, it having been made up to pass through General Ord's hands, and when the gentlemen were supposed to be beyond our lines.

A. LINCOLN.

Sent in cipher at 1.30 P. M.

When Major Eckert departed, he bore with him a letter of the Secretary of War to General Grant, as follows, to wit:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
WASHINGTON, D. C., January 30, 1865.

GENERAL: The President desires that you will please procure for the bearer, Major Thomas T. Eckert, an interview with Messrs. Stephens, Hunter, and Campbell, and if, on his return to you, he request it, pass them through our lines to Fortress Monroe, by such route and under such military precautions as you may deem prudent, giving them protection and comfortable quarters while there, and that you let none of this have any effect upon your movements or plans.

By order of the President:

EDWIN M. STANTON,
Secretary of War.
Lieutenant General GRANT, Commanding, &c.

Supposing the proper point to be then reached, I despatched the Secretary of State with the following instructions, Major Eckert, however, going ahead of him:

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
WASHINGTON, January 31, 1865.

You will proceed to Fortress Monroe, Virginia, there to meet and informally confer with Messrs. Stephens, Hunter, and Campbell, on the basis of my letter to F. P. Blair, Esq., of January 18, 1865, a copy of which you have. You will make known to them that three things are indispensable, to wit:

1. The restoration of the national authority throughout all the States.
2. No receding, by the Executive of the United States, on the slavery question, from the position assumed thereon in the late annual message to Congress, and in preceding documents.
3. No cessation of hostilities short of an end of the war and the disbanding of all forces hostile to the government.

You will inform them that all propositions of theirs, not inconsistent with the above, will be considered and passed upon in a spirit of sincere liberality. You will hear all they may choose to say, and report it to me. You will not assume to definitely consummate anything.

Yours, &c., ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

To notify Major Eckert that the Secretary of State would be at Fortress Monroe, and to put them in communication, the following despatch was sent:

Call at Fortress Monroe, and put yourself under direction of Mr. S., whom you will find there.

On the morning of the 2d instant, the following telegrams were received by me, respectively, from the Secretary of State and Major Eckert:

Arrived at ten this evening. Richmond party not here. I remain here.

His Excellency A. LINCOLN, President of the United States:
I have the honor to report the delivery of your communication and my letter at 4.15 this afternoon, to which I received a reply at 6 P. M., but not satisfactory.

At 8 P. M. the following note, addressed to General Grant, was received:

CITY POINT, VA., February 1, 1865.
SIR: We desire to go to Washington city, to confer informally with the President, personally, in reference to the matters mentioned in his letter to Mr. Blair, of the 18th January, ultimo, without any personal compromise on any question in the letter. We have the permission to do so from the authorities in Richmond.

Very respectfully yours,

ALEX. H. STEPHENS.
R. M. T. HUNTER.
J. A. CAMPBELL.

Lieutenant General GRANT.

At 9.30 P. M., I notified them that they could not proceed further, unless they complied with the terms expressed in my letter. The point of meeting designated in the above note would not, in my opinion, be insisted upon. Think Fort Monroe would be acceptable. Having complied with my instructions, I will return to Washington to-morrow, unless otherwise ordered.

On reading this despatch of Major Eckert, I was about to recall him and the Secretary of State, when the following telegram of General Grant to the Secretary of War was shown me:

The following telegram received at Washington 4.25 A. M., February 2, 1865. From City Point, Va., February 1, 10.30 P. M., 1865:

Now that the interview between Major Eckert, under his written instructions, and Mr. Stephens and party has ended, I will state confidentially, but not officially, to become a matter of record, that I am convinced, upon conversation with Messrs. Stephens and Hunter, that their intentions are good and their desire sincere to restore peace and union. I have not felt myself at liberty to express even views of my own, or to account for my reticency. This has placed me in an awkward position, which I could have avoided by not seeing them in the first instance. I fear now their going back without any expression from any one in authority will have a bad influence. At the same time I recognize the difficulties in the way of receiving these informal commissioners at this time, and do not know what to recommend. I am sorry, however, that Mr. Lincoln cannot have an interview with the two named in this despatch, if not all three now within our lines. Their letter to me was all that the President's instructions contemplated to secure their safe conduct, if they had used the same language to Major Eckert.

Lieutenant General.

Hon. EDWIN M. STANTON, Secretary of War.

This despatch of General Grant changed my purpose; and accordingly I telegraphed him and the Secretary of State respectively as follows:

U. S. GRANT,

Lieutenant General.

On the night of the 2d I reached Hampton Roads, found the Secretary of State and Major Eckert on a steamer anchored off shore, and learned of them that the Richmond gentlemen were on another steamer also anchored off shore, in the Roads, and that the Secretary of State had not yet seen or communicated with them. I ascertained that Major Eckert had literally complied with his instructions and I saw, for the first time, the answer of the Richmond gentlemen to him, which, in his despatch to me of the 1st, he characterizes as "not satisfactory." That answer is as follows, to wit:

CITY POINT, VIRGINIA, February 1, 1865.

MAJOR: Your note, delivered by yourself this day, has been considered. In reply, we have to say that we were furnished with a copy of the letter of President Lincoln to Francis P. Blair, Esq., of the 18th of January ultimo, another copy of which is appended to your note. Our instructions are contained in a letter, of which the following is a copy:

RICHMOND, January 28, 1865.

In conformity with the letter of Mr. Lincoln, of which the foregoing is a copy, you are to proceed to Washington city for informal conference with him upon the issues involved in the existing war, and for the purpose of securing peace to the two countries.

With great respect, your obedient servant,

JEFFERSON DAVIS.

The substantial object to be obtained by the informal conference is, to ascertain upon what terms the existing war can be terminated honorably.

Our instructions contemplate a personal interview between President Lincoln and ourselves at Washington city, but with this explanation we are ready to meet any person or persons that President Lincoln may appoint, at such place as he may designate. Our earnest desire is, that a just and honorable peace may be agreed upon, and we are prepared to receive or to submit propositions which may, possibly, lead to the attainment of that end.

Very respectfully yours,

ALEXANDER H. STEPHENS.

R. M. T. HUNTER.

JNO. A. CAMPBELL.

THOMAS T. ECKERT, Major, and A. D. C.

A note of these gentlemen, subsequently addressed to General Grant, has already been given in Major Eckert's despatch of the 1st instant.

I also here saw, for the first time, the following note, addressed by the Richmond gentlemen to Major Eckert:

CITY POINT, VA., February 2, 1865.

MAJOR: In reply to your verbal statement, that your instructions did not allow you to alter the conditions upon which a passport could be given to us, we say that we are willing to proceed to Fortress Monroe, and there to have an informal conference, with any person or persons that President Lincoln may appoint, on the basis of his letter to Francis P. Blair of the 18th of January ultimo, or upon any other terms or conditions that he may hereafter propose, not inconsistent with the essential principles of self-government and popular rights upon which our institutions are founded.

It is our earnest wish to ascertain, after a free interchange of ideas and information, upon what principles and terms, if any, a just and honorable peace can be established without the further effusion of blood, and to contribute our utmost efforts to accomplish such a result.

We think it better to add, that, in accepting your passport we are not to be understood as committing ourselves to anything, but to carry to this informal conference the views and feelings above expressed.

Very respectfully yours, &c.,

ALEXANDER H. STEPHENS.

J. A. CAMPBELL.

R. M. T. HUNTER.

THOMAS T. ECKERT, Major, and A. D. C.

NOTE.—The above communication was delivered to me at Fort Monroe at 4.30 P. M., February 2d, by Lieutenant Colonel Babcock, of General Grant's staff.

THOMAS T. ECKERT,

Major, and A. D. C.

On the morning of the 3d, the three gentlemen, Messrs. Stephens, Hunter, and Campbell, came aboard of our steamer, and had an interview with the Secretary of State and myself, of several hours' duration. No question of preliminaries to the meeting was then and there made or mentioned. No other person was present; no papers were exchanged or produced; and it was, in advance, agreed that the conversation was to be informal and verbal merely.

On our part, the whole substance of the instructions to the Secretary of State, hereinbefore recited, was stated and insisted upon, and nothing was said inconsistent therewith; while, by the other party, it was not said that in any event or on any condition, they ever would consent to re-union; and yet they equally omitted to declare that they never would so consent. They seemed to desire a postponement of that question, and the adoption of some other course first which, as some of them seemed to argue, might or might not lead to re-union; but which course, we thought, would amount to an indefinite postponement. The conference ended without result.

The foregoing, containing as is believed all the information sought, is respectfully submitted.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

MESSAGE TO THE SENATE.

To the Senate of the United States:

In answer to the resolution of the Senate, of the 8th instant,* requesting information concerning recent conversations or communications with insurgents, under executive sanction, I transmit a report from the Secretary of State, to whom the resolution was referred.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

WASHINGTON, February 10, 1865.

*The resolution was offered by Mr. SUMNER, and is as follows:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested, if in his opinion not incompatible with the public interest, to furnish to the Senate any information in his possession concerning recent conversations or communications with certain rebels, said to have been under executive sanction, including communications with the rebel Jefferson Davis, and any correspondence relative thereto.

This amendment, offered by Mr. SAULSBURY, was rejected; And that he also requested to inform the Senate whether he, or others acting under his authority, did not require, as a condition to reunion, the acquiescence of said persons mentioned in said resolution, or of the public authorities of the so-called Confederate States, in the abolition of slavery in said States; and also, whether he, or those acting by his authority, did not require as a condition to negotiation that the said confederates should lay down their arms. And that he be requested to inform the Senate fully in reference to everything connected with or occurring in said conference or conferences in relation to the subject matter of said conferences. And also that he be requested to state whether or not an armistice was not asked for by Messrs. Stephens, Hunter, and Campbell, with the view to prepare the minds of the Southern people for peace and reunion of the States.

information in his possession concerning recent conversations or communications with certain rebels, said to have taken place under executive sanction, including communications with the rebel Jefferson Davis, and any correspondence relating thereto," has the honor to report that the Senate may properly be referred to a special message of the President bearing upon the subject of the resolution, and transmitted to the House this day. Appended to this report is a copy of an instruction which has been addressed to Charles Francis Adams, Esq., envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States at London, and which is the only correspondence found in this department touching the subject referred to in the resolution.

Respectfully submitted.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
WASHINGTON, February 10, 1865.

MR. SEWARD TO MR. ADAMS.

No. 1258.]

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
WASHINGTON, February 7, 1865.

SIR: It is a truism that in times of peace there are always instigators of war. So soon as a war begins there are citizens who impatiently demand negotiations for peace. The advocates of war, after an agitation, longer or shorter, generally gain their fearful end, though the war declared is not unfrequently unnecessary and unwise. So peace agitators in time of war ultimately bring about an abandonment of the conflict, sometimes without securing the advantages which were originally expected from the conflict.

The agitators for war in time of peace, and for peace in time of war, are not necessarily, or perhaps ordinarily, unpatriotic in their purposes or motives. Results alone determine whether they are wise or unwise. The treaty of peace concluded at Guadalupe Hidalgo was secured by an irregular negotiator, under the ban of the government. Some of the efforts which have been made to bring about negotiations with a view to end our civil war are known to the whole world, because they have employed foreign as well as domestic agents. Others, with whom you have had to deal confidentially, are known to yourself, although they have not publicly transpired. Other efforts have occurred here which are known only to the persons actually moving in them and to this government. I am now to give, for your information, an account of an affair, of the same general character, which recently received much attention here, and which, doubtless, will excite inquiry abroad.

A few days ago Francis P. Blair, Esq., of Maryland, obtained from the President a simple leave to pass through our military lines, without definite views known to the government. Mr. Blair visited Richmond, and on his return he showed to the President a letter which Jefferson Davis had written to Mr. Blair, in which Davis wrote that Mr. Blair was at liberty to say to President Lincoln that Davis was now, as he always had been, willing to send commissioners, if assured they would be received, or to receive any that should be sent; that he was not disposed to find obstacles in the form. He would send commissioners to confer with the President, with a view to a restoration of peace between the two countries, if he could be assured they would be received. The President thereupon, on the 15th of January, addressed a note to Mr. Blair, in which the President, after acknowledging that he had read the note of Mr. Davis, said that he was, and always should be, willing to receive any agents that Mr. Davis or any other influential person now actually resisting the authority of the government might send to confer informally with the President, with a view to the restoration of peace to the people of our one common country. Mr. Blair visited Richmond with this letter, and then again came back to Washington. On the 29th instant we were advised from the camp of Lieutenant General Grant that Alexander H. Stephens, R. M. T. Hunter, and John A. Campbell were applying for leave to pass through the lines to Washington, as peace commissioners, to confer with the President. They were permitted by the Lieutenant General to come to his headquarters, to await there the decision of the President. Major Eckert was sent down to meet the party from Richmond at General Grant's headquarters. The major was directed to deliver to them a copy of the President's letter to Mr. Blair, with a note to be addressed to them, and signed by the major, in which they were directly informed that if they should be allowed to pass our lines they would be understood as coming for an informal conference, upon the basis of the aforementioned letter of the 15th of January to Mr. Blair. If they should express their assent to this condition in writing, then Major Eckert was directed to give them safe conduct to Fortress Monroe, where a person coming from the President would meet them. It being thought probable, from a report of their conversation with Lieutenant General Grant, that the Richmond party would, in the manner prescribed, accept the condition mentioned, the Secretary of State was charged by the President with the duty of representing this government in the expected informal conference. The Secretary arrived at Fortress Monroe in the night of the first day of February. Major Eckert met him in the morning of the second of February with the information that the persons who had come from Richmond had not accepted, in writing, the condition upon which he was allowed to give them conduct to Fortress Monroe. The major had given the same information by telegraph to the President, at Washington. On receiving this information, the President prepared a telegram directing the Secretary to return to Washington. The Secretary was preparing, at the same moment, to so return, without waiting for instructions from the President; but at this juncture Lieutenant General Grant telegraphed to the Secretary of War, as well as to the Secretary of State, that the party from Richmond had reconsidered and accepted the conditions tendered them through Major Eckert, and General Grant urgently advised the President to confer in person with the Richmond party. Under these circumstances, the Secretary, by the President's direction, remained at Fortress Monroe, and the President joined him there on the night of the 2d of February. The Richmond party was brought down the James river in a United States steam transport during the day, and the transport was anchored in Hampton Roads.

On the morning of the 3d the President, attended by the Secretary, received Messrs. Stephens, Hunter, and Campbell on board the United States steam transport River Queen, in Hampton Roads. The conference was altogether informal. There was no attendance of secretaries, clerks, or other witnesses. Nothing was written or read. The conversation, although earnest and free, was calm, and courteous, and kind on both sides. The Richmond party approached the discussion rather indirectly, and at no time did they either make categorical demands, or tender formal stipulations, or absolute refusals. Nevertheless, during the conference, which lasted four hours, the several points at issue between the government and the insurgents were distinctly raised, and discussed fully, intelligently, and in an amicable spirit. What the insurgent party seemed chiefly to favor was a postponement of the question of separation, upon which the war is waged, and a mutual direction of efforts of the government, as well as those of the insurgents, to some extrinsic policy or scheme for a season, during which passions might be expected to subside, and the armies be reduced, and trade and intercourse between the people of both sections resumed. It was suggested by them that through such postponement we might now have immediate peace, with some not very certain prospect of an ultimate satisfactory adjustment of political relations between this government and the States, section, or people now engaged in conflict with it.

This suggestion, though deliberately considered, was nevertheless regarded by the President as one of armistice or truce, and he announced that we can agree to no cessation or suspension of hostilities, except on the basis of the disbandment of the insurgent forces, and the restoration of the national authority throughout all the States in the Union. Collaterally, and in subordination to the proposition which was thus announced, the anti-slavery policy of the United States was reviewed in all its bearings, and the President announced that he must not be expected to depart from the positions he had heretofore assumed in his proclamation of emancipation and other documents, as these positions were reiterated in his last annual message. It was further declared by the President that the complete restoration of the national authority everywhere was an indispensable condition of any assent on our part to whatever form of peace might be proposed. The President assured the other party that, while he must adhere to these positions, he would be prepared, so far as power is lodged with the Executive, to exercise liberality. His power, however, is limited by the Constitution; and when peace should be made, Congress must necessarily act in regard to appropriations of money and to the admission of representatives from the insurrectionary States. The Richmond party were then informed that Congress had, on the 31st ultimo, adopted by a constitutional majority a joint resolution submitting to the several States the proposition to abolish slavery throughout the Union, and that there is every reason to expect that it will be soon accepted by three-fourths of the States, so as to become a part of the national organic law.

The conference came to an end by mutual acquiescence, without producing an agreement of views upon the several matters discussed, or any of them. Nevertheless, it is perhaps of some importance that we have been able to submit our opinions and views directly to prominent insurgents, and to hear them in answer in a courteous and not unfriendly manner.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

DAVIS'S ACCOUNT OF THE CONFERENCE.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the Confederate States of America:

Having recently received a written notification which satisfied me that the President of the United States was disposed to confer informally with unofficial agents which might be sent by me, with a view to the restoration of peace, I requested the Hon. Alexander H. Stephens, the Hon. R. M. T. Hunter, and the Hon. John A. Campbell to proceed through our lines and to hold conference with Mr. Lincoln, or any one he might depute to represent him.

I herewith transmit, for the information of Congress, the report of the eminent citizens above named, showing that they refused to enter into negotiations with the Confederate States, or any one of them separately, or to give to our people any other terms or guaranties than those which the conqueror may grant, or to permit us to have peace on any other basis than our unconditional submission to their rule, coupled with the acceptance of their recent legislation on the subject of the relations between the white and black population of each State. Such is, as I understand, and the effect of the amendment to the Constitution which has been adopted by the Congress of the United States.

JEFFERSON DAVIS.

EXECUTIVE OFFICE, RICHMOND, Feb. 6, 1865.

RICHMOND, VA., Feb. 5, 1865.

TO THE PRESIDENT OF THE CONFEDERATE STATES:

SIR: Under your letter of appointment of the 28th ult., we proceeded to seek an "informal conference" with Abraham Lincoln, President of the United States, upon the subject mentioned in the letter. The conference was granted, and took place on the 3d instant, on board of a steamer in Hampton Roads, where we met President Lincoln and the Hon. Mr. Seward, Secretary of State of the United States. It continued for several hours, and was both full and explicit.

We learned from them that the message of President Lincoln to the Congress of the United States in December last explains clearly and distinctly his sentiments as to the terms, conditions, and method of proceeding by which peace can be secured to the people, and we were not informed that they would be modified or altered to obtain that end. We understand from him that no terms or proposals of any treaty or agreement looking to an ultimate settlement would be entertained or made by him with the Confederate States, because that would be a recognition of their existence as a separate power, which, under no circumstances, would be done; and for like reasons that no such terms would be entertained by him from the States separately; that no extended truce or armistice (as at present advised) would be granted, without a satisfactory assurance in advance of a complete restoration of the authority of the United States over all places within the States of the Confederacy.

That whatever consequence may follow from the re-establishment of that authority must be accepted; but that individuals subject to pains and penalties under the laws of the United States might rely upon a very liberal use of the power confided to him to remit those pains and penalties if peace be restored.

During the conference the proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States, adopted by Congress on the 31st ultimo, was brought to our notice. This amendment declares that neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except for crimes, should exist within the United States, or any place within their jurisdiction, and that Congress should have power to enforce this amendment by appropriate legislation.*

Of all the correspondence that preceded the conference

VICKSBURG, MISSISSIPPI,
August 30, 1862.

HON. E. B. WASHBURN:

DEAR SIR: * * * The people of the North need not quarrel over the institution of slavery. What Vice President Stephens acknowledges the corner-stone of the Confederacy is already knocked out. Slavery is already dead and cannot be resurrected. It would take a standing army to maintain slavery in the South, if we were to make peace to-day, guaranteeing to the South all their former constitutional privileges. I never was an abolitionist; not even what could be called anti-slavery; but I try to judge fairly and honestly, and it became patent to my mind early in the rebellion, that the North and South could never live at peace with each other except as one nation, and that without slavery. As anxious as I am to see peace established, I would not, therefore, be willing to see any settlement until this question is forever settled.

Your sincere friend,

U. S. GRANT.

DAVIS AND THE RICHMOND ADMINISTRATION ON PEACE.

February 6—A public meeting was held in Richmond, to respond to the terms of peace offered by Davis. Rev. Dr. Burrows, of the Baptist Church, made an opening prayer. Governor Smith spoke, followed by Jefferson Davis, whose speech is thus reported in the Richmond Dispatch of the 7th:

Upon the subject of the recent Peace Commission, President Davis said that for himself he had never entertained much hope of effecting honorable terms so long as our cause was meeting with reverses; but under the circumstances, when semi-official representation had so frequently visited our government, intimating that negotiations might result in a satisfactory adjustment of our difficulties, when it was plain that the sufferings of the people dictated that every effort on his part should be made to bring about a cessation of hostilities, he felt it his duty, as he had always done, to appoint those whom he regarded as among the best men we had, who were most calculated to heal the existing breach which severed us, and obtain that independence for the Confederacy from the Federal government which no other power on the face of earth but Yankees would think of denying. As to conditions of peace, President Davis emphatically asserted that none save the independence of the Confederacy could ever receive his sanction. He had embarked in the cause with a full knowledge of the tremendous odds against us. But with the approval of a just Providence, which he conscientiously believed was on our side, and a united resolve of our people, he doubted not that victory would yet crown our labors. In his correspondence with Mr. Lincoln, that functionary had always spoken of the United States and Confederacy as our afflicted country; but in his replies he—the speaker—had never failed to refer to them as separate † Intercepted letter of John A. Campbell:

CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA,
WAR DEPARTMENT, RICHMOND, VA.,

September 13, 1864.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of the 31st ultimo, was received to-day. Your appointment has been made, and the commission sent to Madison, Georgia. It is difficult to form any opinion as to prospects before us. It is very apparent that the people in both sections of the late Union earnestly desire peace, and that the principal difficulty lies in the settlement of the terms. The sentiment of the Northern people in favor of a restoration of the Union has been constantly growing, especially among the better classes of the population. They have discovered that alone they will be the victims of a turbulent Democracy, who have no control over themselves and will exact no responsibility from their leaders as rulers. They are not willing to rely upon their own capacity to govern themselves. With Union this class would make peace on any terms and would modify their Constitution to meet our views. But this is not the governing class at the North, and I do not see that any modification of their Constitution can be made, nor how any guaranties can be given. Any peace on the terms of Union will have to be made on the terms of their present Union. No administration at the North can offer more or could fulfill any agreement to do more. The issue, therefore, that is presented to us, is a return to the conditions of 1860, or independence. In my judgment all discussion of the question in any other form is a useless, if not a pernicious discussion. I do not think that any considerable party at the North is prepared to adopt the alternative we propose, and no considerable party at the South is prepared to adopt the alternative proposed by our enemies. I am not, therefore, yet hopeful of peace. But events seem to be hastening onward towards a termination of the war, and in the termination of the war, a solution of the terms of a settlement must take place. I do not venture to predict what that settlement will be. A civil commotion at the North—defeats of our armies—defeats of the Northern armies will affect these. None can decide when any of these events may occur. I fear that my answer will not be very satisfactory. But I cannot reduce the question of peace to the category of the "How."

Respectfully yours,

J. A. CAMPBELL.

MR. JOEL A. BELLUPS.

and distinct governments, and sooner than we should ever be united again he would be willing to yield up everything he had on earth, and if it were possible would sacrifice a thousand lives before he would succumb.

He concluded by exhorting those at home who are able to bear arms to unite with those already in the army in repelling the foe, believing that thereby we would compel the Yankees in less than twelve months to petition us for peace upon our own terms.

These resolutions were adopted :

Whereas, The Commonwealth of Virginia, in concert with other American States, did, in the year 1776, solemnly set forth that when any form of government becomes destructive of the happiness or dangerous to the liberties of the people, it is the right and the duty of the people to alter or abolish it, in pursuance whereof they did declare themselves independent States; and whereas, her separate independence, and that of the co-acting States, was afterwards acknowledged by the world; and whereas, Virginia did subsequently form with other States a common Government or agency for the management of their foreign affairs and other specified general purposes, which said common Government or agency, received no other or further recognition by foreign powers than as representatives of the several State sovereignties already recognized; and whereas, Virginia, in entering into this association of federation, did expressly reserve for herself, and therefore for her co-States, co-States' rights which attached to the act itself of resuming the powers whensoever the same might be perverted to their injury or oppression; and whereas, the Commonwealth of Virginia did in sovereign convention, in April, 1861, decide and determine that circumstances had arrived which made it her imperative duty, as it was her indisputable right, to withdraw from the association known as the United States of America, and resume her separate sovereignty; and whereas, this legitimate act has been followed by an atrocious war upon her and upon the States with which she subsequently formed a new confederation, by the States from which she and they withdrew, for the purpose of subjecting her and them to the absolute and tyrannical domination of the United States; and whereas, after four years of hostilities, conducted on the part of our enemies with a barbarity equalled only by the wickedness of their designs, their authorities did invite a conference with a view to the establishment of peace, which invitation was responded to by the Confederate authorities; and whereas, it appears from the report of the Confederate Commissioners to said conference that it was declared on the part of our enemy that nothing should terminate the existing war but our unconditional submission to their yoke, and the acknowledgment of their absolute authority; that their laws for the confiscation of our property and execution of our citizens should be enforced by the judges and other officers whom they would appoint for that purpose; that the only palliation of our wretchedness should be the voluntary mercy of those who for four years have murdered our people and ravaged our homes; that our social system shall be immediately upturned and hereafter regulated at their will; that the uniform which our soldiers have made so honorable must be stripped from their persons, and the flag under which they have so often marched to victory must be trailed in the dust and thrown away forever; therefore be it

Resolved, That we, the citizens here assembled, do spurn with the indignation due to so gross an insult, the terms on which the President of the United States has proffered peace to the people of the Confederate States.

Resolved, That the circumstances under which that proffer has been made add to the outrage, and stamp it as a designed and premeditated indignity to our people.

Resolved, That our profoundest gratitude is due to the soldiers who for four years have maintained our liberties against the utmost efforts of our enemies, and that while we look to them to illustrate in future feats of the past, we will sustain their efforts by every means and resource at our command.

Resolved, That in His presence, and in the face of the world, reverently invoking thereto the aid of Almighty God, we renew our resolve to maintain our liberties and independence; and to this we mutually pledge our lives, our fortunes, and our sacred honor.

February 9—A war meeting was held in Richmond, at which R. M. T. Hunter presided. Secretary Benjamin, Hugh W. Sheffey, and others spoke. The following resolutions were adopted :

Whereas, While the existing war between the United States and the Confederate States has been and still is a war of conquest on the part of the former, it has been waged by the latter in defence of life, liberty, and property, and to secure the right of self-government for the people; and

Whereas, The President of the United States has recently declared that there is no government or authority, either State or Confederate, within the Confederate States, with which he can make any terms, and that there can be no peace until the Confederate States shall lay down their arms and submit to the authority of the Government of the United States, and accept the laws of the same, some of which threaten our people with all that is degrading in subjugation, and all that is cruel in conquest; now, therefore, be it

Resolved, First, That the events which have occurred during the progress of the war have but confirmed our original determination to strike for our independence, and that, with the blessing of God, we will never lay down our arms until it shall have been won. [Wild and long continued cheering followed the reading of this resolution.]

Secondly, That as we believe our resources to be sufficient for the purpose, we do not doubt that we shall conduct the war successfully, and to that issue, and we hereby invoke the people, in the name of the holiest of all causes, to spare neither their blood nor their treasure in its maintenance and support.

Thirdly, That we tender our thanks to our soldiers in the field for their noble efforts in behalf of the country, its rights and its liberties, and take this occasion to assure them that no effort of ours shall be spared to assist them in maintaining the great cause to which we hereby devote ourselves and our all.

CORRESPONDENCE OF GENs. LEE AND GRANT, ON A MILITARY CONVENTION.

RICHMOND, VA., March 13, 1865.

To the Senate and House of Representatives :

I herewith transmit for your information copies of the correspondence referred to in my message of this date, in regard to the proposed conference to adjust terms of peace by means of a military convention.

JEFFERSON DAVIS.

HEADQUARTERS C. S. ARMIES, March 2, 1865.

Lieut. Gen. U. S. GRANT,

Commanding United States Armies :

GENERAL : Lieut. Gen. Longstreet has informed me that, in a recent conversation between himself and Maj. Gen. Ord, as to the possibility of arriving at a satisfactory adjustment of the present unhappy difficulties by means of a military convention, Gen. Ord stated that if I desired to have an interview with you on the subject, you would not decline, provided I had authority to act. Sincerely desiring to leave nothing untried which may put an end to the calamities of war, I propose to meet you at such convenient time and place as you may designate, with the hope that, upon an interchange of views, it may be found practicable to submit the subjects of controversy between the belligerents to a convention of the kind mentioned.

In such event, I am authorized to do whatever the result of the proposed interview may render necessary or advisable. Should you accede to this proposition, I would suggest that, if agreeable to you, we meet at the place selected by Gen. Ord and Longstreet for the interview, at 11 A. M. on Monday next.

Very respectfully your obedient servant,

R. E. LEE, General.

HEADQUARTERS ARMIES U. S., March 4, 1865.

Gen. R. E. LEE,

Commanding C. S. Armies :

GENERAL : Your two letters of the 2d instant were received yesterday. In regard to any apprehended misunderstanding in reference to the exchange of political prisoners, I think there need be none. Gen. Ord or Gen. Longstreet has probably misunderstood what I said to the former on the subject, or I may have failed to make myself understood, possibly. A few days before the interview between Generals Longstreet and Ord, I had received a despatch from Gen. Hoffman, Commissary General of Prisoners, stating in substance that all prisoners of war who were or had been in close confinement or irons, whether under charges or sentences, had been ordered to City Point for exchange. I forwarded the substance of that despatch to Lieut. Col. Mulf-rd, Assistant Agent of Exchange, and presumed it probable that he had communicated it to Col. Robert Ould. A day or two after, an offender, who was neither a prisoner of war nor a political prisoner, was executed, after a fair and impartial trial, and in accordance with the laws of war and the usage of civilized nations. It was in explanation of this class of cases I told Gen. Ord to speak to Gen. Longstreet.

Reference to my letter of February 16 will show my understanding on the subject of releasing political or citizen prisoners.

In regard to meeting you on the 6th inst., I would state that I have no authority to accede to your proposition for a conference on the subject proposed. Such authority is vested in the President of the United States alone.

Gen. Ord could only have meant that I would not refuse an interview on any subject on which I have a right to act; which, of course, would be such as are purely of a military character, and on the subject of exchange, which has been entrusted to me.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

U. S. GRANT, Lieut. Gen.

Gen. R. E. LEE, Commanding, &c.

GENERAL: You will learn by the letter of Gen. Longstreet the result of his second interview with Gen. Ord. The points as to whether yourself or Gen. Grant should invite the other to a conference is not worth discussing. It you think the statements of Gen. Ord render it probably useful that the conference suggested should be had, you will proceed as you may prefer, and are clothed with all the supplemental authority you may need in the consideration of any proposition for a military convention, or the appointment of a commissioner to enter into such an arrangement as will cause at least temporary suspension of hostilities.

Very truly, yours,

JEFFERSON DAVIS.

RESOLUTION ON CONSTITUTIONAL POWERS.

1865, February 6—Mr. EDOERTON submitted the following resolution, and demanded the previous question on its adoption:

Whereas the Daily Morning Chronicle, of this city, the reputed political organ of the President, in recent editorials upon the subject of negotiations for peace, has referred to the President of the United States as having gone "in his sovereign capacity" to treat with the commissioners from Richmond, and has further described the President as "the sovereign head of the greatest Government on earth;" and whereas the supreme court of the District of Columbia has, by a late solemn adjudication, affirmed principles as the law of the land which recognized arbitrary dictatorial powers in the President, not only as to military but as to civil offenders, which are subversive of civil liberty and of the public welfare; therefore,

Resolved, (as the judgment of this House.) That the President of the United States is in no constitutional sense the sovereign thereof, but that all his governmental powers are derived from the Constitution and constitutional laws of the United States, and are limited by them; and this House sincerely deprecate all political teachings and judicial decisions having a tendency to exalt the President above the Constitution and laws, or to clothe him with attributes unknown to them, or to derogate from the powers of Congress; and they affirm that the principle that the people are sovereign, and that all departments of the Government are their agents or servants, and should be kept in strict subordination to the Constitution and laws, is essential to the permanence of republican government and to civil liberty.

Mr. BALDWIN (of Mass.) proposing to debate it, the resolution went over.

PROPOSITIONS FOR "PEACE."

IN SENATE.

1864, December 12—Mr. GARRETT DAVIS offered this resolution, which was ordered to be printed:

Joint resolution for the restoration of peace and the Union, the vindication of the Constitution, and the construction of additional and adequate guaranties of the rights and liberties of the people of the United States.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That a convention of all the States is the most appropriate agency by which to bring about the restoration of peace and the Union, the vindication of the Constitution, and the construction of additional and adequate guaranties of the rights and liberties of the people of the United States; and to promote these great ends, such a convention should be held, and should consider the following propositions as the basis of a lasting settlement of all difficulties between the beligerent States and people, and as amendments of the Constitution of the United States:

First. The States of Maine, New Hampshire, and Vermont to be formed into one State; the States of Massachusetts, Connecticut, and Rhode Island to be formed into one State; and the States of Maryland, Delaware, and the Eastern shore of Virginia to be formed into one State. But this consolidation of States to be for federal and national purposes only, unless the respective States to be formed into one shall otherwise determine.

Second. The President and the Vice President to be taken alternately from the free and slave States, and for the term of four years; but both not to be at the same time citizens of the free or slave States. No person who may have filled the office of President ever again to be eligible to it.

Third. The President and Vice President to be chosen in this manner: In the month of January next before the expiration of the presidential term for the time being, each State to select one of its own citizens, who shall be a native-born citizen of the United States, for the presidency or the vice presidency, the ensuing term, as such State may be a free or a slave State, and as the free or slave States may be entitled to the presidency or the vice presidency; and shall certify under the seal of State, by the governor thereof, to each house of Congress and to the Supreme Court of the United States, severally, the name of such citizen, and for which office he has been selected; and the two houses of Congress shall convene in the hall of the House the first Monday of February ensuing, and request the attendance of the Supreme Court, and when it shall be present, the certificates of the names of all the persons for the presidency that have been received shall be opened, and from those certified as herein directed the Supreme Court shall, in the presence of the two houses of Congress, choose a President, and then a Vice President, from the names so certified for that office. Whenever the office of President shall become vacant during the term, it shall devolve on the Vice President; and when the vice presidency so becomes vacant, the Senate shall, from its own body, and from the senators representing the free or the slave States, as they may differ on this point from the incumbent of the presidency, select a Vice President, to continue in office for the occasion; and thereupon the seat of the senator thus becoming Vice President shall be vacant. No justice of the Supreme Court to be eligible to any other office whatever.

Fourth. The President to have the power to remove from office the head of the Department of State; of the Treasury, War, Navy, and Interior Departments; the Attorney General; all diplomatic officers, whether of the grade of ambassadors, commissioners, or charge d'affaires, and secretaries of legation. All other officers, except those holding office during good behavior, whom the President is required to nominate to the Senate, he may suspend from their offices; but in making such suspensions he shall report each case, with the cause thereof, to the Senate, if it be in session, and if not, at its next session. In all cases where the Senate shall concur with the President, the suspension shall become an absolute removal; but as to those in which it does not concur before the end of the session to which the President is required to report them, the officers shall then, ipso facto, be reinstated in their respective offices. The President also to have power to remove all other civil officers, appointed by executive power, for incompetency to discharge their duties; for want of fidelity to the Constitution and laws of the United States, or for gross and habitual immorality; but to each officer thus removed he shall cause to be delivered a written statement of the cause of his removal, the truth and sufficiency of which the officer may try in the United States court held in the district in which he may have been performing his duties, on writ of quo warranto sued out against his successor in office, and a judgment thereon in his favor to have the effect to restore him to office.

Fifth. The absolute right, at all times, and under all conditions, of the people to the writ of habeas corpus, and to trial by jury in the mode prescribed by the Constitution, for capital or other offences, being indispensable to secure to them personal liberty, the freedom of religious opinion and worship, and the sanctity of church edifices, the freedom of speech and the press, and the right of the people at their elections to vote for those whom they prefer, without constraint, intimidation, and in faithful conformity to the laws, and under the exclusive direction of the proper officers of such elections; their right peaceably to assemble and freely to discuss and pronounce their opinions on all public measures, and the conduct of public officers; and to purchase and keep arms and munitions for their own defence; the exemption of all persons not in the military or naval service of the United States, or in the militia when in actual service in time of war or public danger, from military arrest, except when they are within the actual lines of some corps in time of war or public danger, and when arrested under such circumstances to be at once handed over to the proper civil authorities; and the absolute immunity of such persons from trial or examination, under martial or military law, by military tribunals of any kind, or by any other law or courts than the civil courts distinguished from the military; and of their persons, houses, papers, and effects from searches and seizures, without warrant or other process of law; the military power never to be brought into conflict with the civil authorities, but in all times where it is necessary and proper, to be employed to uphold the civil law and courts. The Constitution and laws of the United States made in pursuance of it, being the supreme law of the land, and continuously and under all circumstances of unimpaired validity, no other law or authority can have any effect to nullify, suspend, or limit their operation. And all acts of Congress not authorized by the Constitution, and all edicts and proclamations of the President, or orders of any military officer, in derogation of the Constitution or laws, being utterly null and void, the President having no power whatever that is not conferred by an express provision of the Constitution, or by some law of Congress passed in pursuance of it. And the only localities and conditions in which the Constitution, laws, and courts of the United States can be suspended, being when a portion of the country is occupied by a dominating hostile army; and as its rule is removed, theirs being resumed, the right of the people to all the sources of information, by the purchase of and transmission to them of all books, newspapers, and so forth, without any obstruction, and to free trade and commerce with their fellow-citizens of all the States, except so far as restricted by law. The personal rights, privileges, and liberties heretoforth being the inheritance of the people of the United States, and the chief and inestimable fruits of human government, they shall always be held to be inviolable, and their infringement to be both a grievous private wrong to every person thereby injured, and also a public crime; and all persons who may commit it to become infamous, and to be further punished by laws to be passed for that purpose, without pardon or commutation.

Sixth. Each State to have the exclusive right and power to declare and establish, within its own limits, every subject of property and its local and domestic institutions, and to make all laws and regulations concerning them.

Seventh. Private property not to be taken for the United States, except to subserve some operation of the federal government authorized by the Constitution, and not until full and fair compensation shall have been made to its owner, or secured to him in a mode to be provided by law.

Eighth. No military necessity ever to originate or confer any power whatever, except with and for armed forces in the field or in garrison, and within their present actual lines, to supply the ordinary and necessary military wants of each force essential to the public service, immediate or impending, and so urgent as not to allow the delay which would be required for the action of the civil authority; and all power created or authorized by any military necessity to be exercised exclusively by the officer present and in the actual command of the force in which and where it arises. The United States to be bound to make full indemnity for the damage sustained by all persons from any acts done by any of its military officers under a real or supposed military necessity, and the officer to be also responsible to all persons injured by his abuse of power.

Ninth. No negro, or person whose mother or grand-mother is or was a negro, to be a citizen of the United States.

Tenth. The enumeration in this proposition of certain rights and liberties of the people, and powers of the States, and of denials, restrictions, and limitations of powers to the United States, the federal government or its officers, not to be held to deny, or disparage any of the other rights and liberties of the people or powers of the States; and as to the United States, the federal government or any of its officers to confer or enlarge any power whatever.

Eleventh. In giving construction to the Constitution, this rule shall be inflexibly adhered to. All rights, liberties, or privileges assured by it to the people, or powers reserved to the States; and all denials, restrictions, or limitations of power to the United States, the federal government, or any of its officers, provided for by its particular, or express language, not to be abrogated, impaired, or in any way affected, by any of its general language or provisions, or by any implication resulting from it, or by any other law or laws whatsoever.

IN HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

1865, January 16.—Mr. Cox offered the following resolution:

Whereas the country bails with manifestations of patriotic joy and congratulation the victories recently achieved by our brave armies; and whereas "the recognized object of war, at least among civilized and Christian nations, is an honorable and satisfactory peace; and that although we do not know that the insurgents are yet prepared to agree to any terms of pacification that our Government would or should deem acceptable, yet as there can be no possible harm resulting from ascertaining precisely what they are ready to do, and in order to refute the imputation that the Administration contemplates with satisfaction a continuance of hostilities for their own sake, on any ground of mere punctilio, or for any reason than because it is compelled by an absorbing regard for the very end of its existence;" and whereas "an established and rightly constituted Government," combating armed and menacing rebellion, should strain every nerve to overcome at the earliest moment the resistance it encounters, and should not merely welcome, but seek satisfactory (however informal) assurances that its end has been attained;" Therefore,

Resolved, That now, in this hour of victory, which is the hour of magnanimity, it is eminently the duty of the President, on the basis of the present "rightfully constituted Government," either to send or receive commissioners or agents with a view to national pacification and tranquillity, or by some other rational means known to civilized or Christian nations, secure the cessation of hostilities and the Union of the States.

Which was laid on the table—yeas 84, nays 51, as follows:

White, Fernando Wood, Yeaman—51.

January 31—FERNANDO WOOD offered the following resolution, which was objected to, and laid over under the rule; and, February 6, was adopted without a division:

Resolved, That it is the duty of the President to maintain, in every constitutional and legal manner, the integrity of the American Union as formed by the fathers of the Republic, and in no event, and under no circumstances, to proffer or accept negotiations which shall admit by the remotest implication the existence of any other federal or confederate government within the territory of the United States.

February 4—Mr. INGERSOLL offered the following resolution, which was laid over, under the rule:

Whereas it is alleged that informal negotiations are now pending between the United States and the so-called Confederate States with a view to a restoration of peace: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That it is the deliberate and emphatic opinion of this House that no enduring peace can or should be made which shall ever recognize the traitorous leaders of this rebellion as citizens of the United States, entitled to equal rights, privileges and immunities with the loyal people thereof under the Constitution of the United States.

February 6—Mr Cox offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the President of the United States, in endeavoring to ascertain the disposition of the insurgents in arms against the authority of the Federal Government, with a view to negotiations for peace and the restoration of the Union, is entitled to the gratitude of a suffering and distracted country; and that with a similar view he be respectfully requested to omit no reasonable exertions hereafter which may lead to the desired object, to wit, peace and Union.

Resolved, That, if not incompatible with the above object and the public interests, he be requested to communicate to this House all information leading to and connected with the recent negotiations.

He afterwards withdrew the second resolution. The House refused to lay the first resolution on the table—yeas 30, nays 108, as follows:

Washburn, Whaley, Williams, Wilder, Wilson, Winfield, Fernando Wood, Woodbridge, Worthington, Yeaman—108.

The resolution went over, and was afterwards withdrawn.

1865, February 8—Mr. TOWNSEND offered the following resolution, which was objected, and was laid over, under the rule:

Resolved, That we hail with profound emotions of satisfaction the disposition of the Southern people to submit the questions that have so long drenched our land in blood to the arbitrament of reason rather than the sword; and we pledge our earnest efforts to sustain all measures looking to a settlement that an honorable Government, seeking to sustain its integrity, can offer.

1865, February 13—Mr. DAWSON offered the following resolution:

Whereas the American people have now been engaged in a civil war of gigantic dimensions for nearly four years, which has resulted in frightful destruction of life, property, and treasure, creating an enormous public debt, imposing the most oppressive taxes, covering the land with affliction, corrupting the general morals, and putting in peril the liberties of the nation; and whereas, on the part of the United States and the people of the States which adhere to this government, this is, and ought to be, a war solely to vindicate the Constitution and restore the laws to their just supremacy, and to that we are bound by our oaths and by our solemn pledges made in the face of the world when the war commenced: Therefore,

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to use all honorable and just means to bring about a lasting peace and the re-establishment of fraternal relations among all the people by a restoration of the Union upon the simple and just basis of the Constitution and laws, with every proper guarantee to the southern States that they shall be protected in the full enjoyment of their rights, and that undisturbed control of their own local affairs which the Federal Constitution was intended to secure to them and to us.

1865, February 13—Mr. WILLIAMS offered the following resolutions:

Resolved, 1. That there is no power under the Constitution, in any branch of this Government, to treat with the States confederated in rebellion against it, either for the severance of this Union or for the abrogation of any article of its fundamental law.

Resolved, 2. That inasmuch as the said confederated States have taken up arms against the Government of the United States without any just provocation, and for the avowed purpose of asserting and establishing their independence thereof, and still persist in maintaining that position by armed resistance to its authority: and inasmuch also as the public authorities of this nation have not only declared, as was their duty, that they can accept no terms and entertain no propositions for anything short of absolute and unconditional submission to its laws, and with a clemency and magnanimity almost without example in history have proclaimed a general amnesty, without limits as to time, to such of the malefactors as shall return to their duty, with the exception only of the chief conspirators:

It is hereby declared to be the sense of this House that this Government has already exhausted all the resources of a just and wise statesmanship—except so far as regards the further earnest and vigorous prosecution of the war for the enforcement of the laws—in the effort to restore peace to this nation, and has, to this end, done all that a proper regard for its own interests can allow and all that a decent respect for the opinions of the world could demand of it; and that therefore any further overtures through embassies, public or private, official or unofficial, looking to treaty or compromise with the usurpers at Richmond, would be not only unprofitable, as they would be inconsistent with the rights and dignity of this nation, but are to be deprecate as absolutely mischievous, in giving encouragement to the insurgents and protracting their resistance, by exposing us to misconception, and giving color to the delusion that we mistrust our ability to subdue them to obedience, and are ready to accept something short of the restoration of the Union and the unconditional submission of those who have rebelled against it.

Which were laid on the table—yeas 72, nays 52, as follows:

REPUDIATION OF REBEL DEBT.

IN SENATE.

1865, February 17—Mr. SUMNER submitted the following resolution, which was objected to, but adopted at the evening session without a division:

Whereas certain persons have put in circulation the report that on the suppression of the rebellion the rebel debt or loan may be recognized in whole or in part by the United States; and whereas such a report is calculated to give a false value to such rebel debt or loan: Therefore,

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That Congress hereby declares that the rebel debt or loan is simply an agency of the rebellion which the United States can never, under any circumstances, recognize in any part or in any way.

IN HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

March 3, 1865—It passed. There were a few voices in the negative, but no division was called.

Reconstruction of States.

(See pages 317—332, 436—441.)

IN HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

1864, December 20—Mr. ASHLEY reported from the Select Committee a bill to guarantee to certain States whose governments have been usurped or overthrown, a republican form of government; which was reported modified January 16, 1865. It authorized the appointment by the President, with the consent of the Senate, in each State declared in rebellion a provisional governor, with the pay and emoluments of a brigadier general, to be charged with the civil administration prior to the recognition of a State government, and with the execution of the laws of the United States and the laws in force when the State government was overthrown; but no law or usage whereby any person was heretofore held in involuntary servitude shall be recognized or enforced by any court or officer in such State; and the laws for the trial and punishment of white persons shall extend to all persons, and jurors shall have the qualifications of voters under this law for delegates to the convention. The appointment by the President of other necessary officers is authorized. The expenses of the civil government to be borne by taxes laid in conformity with prior State laws. Sections 4, 5, 6, and 15 are as follows.

That all persons held to involuntary servitude or labor in the States or parts of States in which such persons have been declared free by any proclamation of the President, are hereby emancipated and discharged therefrom, and they and their posterity shall be forever free. And if any such person or their posterity shall be restrained of liberty, under pretence of any claim to such service or labor, the courts of the United States shall, on habeas corpus, discharge them.

That if any person declared free by this act, or any law of the United States, or any proclamation of the President, be restrained of liberty, with intent to be held in or reduced to involuntary servitude or labor, the person convicted before a court of competent jurisdiction of such act shall be punished by fine of not less than $1,500, and be imprisoned not less than five nor more than twenty years.

That every person who shall hereafter hold or exercise any office, civil or military, except offices merely ministerial and military offices below the grade of colonel in the rebel service, State or confederate, is hereby declared not to be a citizen of the United States.

That the United States, in Congress assembled, do hereby recognize the government of the State of Louisiana, inaugurated under and by the convention which assembled on the 6th day of April, A. D. 1864, at the city of New Orleans; and the government of the State of Arkansas, inaugurated under and by the convention which assembled on the 8th day of January, 1864, at the city of Little Rock: Provided, That the same or other conventions, duly assembled, shall first have incorporated into the constitutions of those States, respectively, the conditions prescribed in the twelfth section of this act, and the marshal of the United States shall have returned to the President of the United States the enrollment directed by the seventh section to be made and returned to the provisional governor, and it shall appear thereby that the persons taking the oath to support the Constitution of the United States, together with the citizens of the United States from such State in the military or naval service of the United States, amount to a majority of the persons enrolled in the State. And the President shall, thereupon, by proclamation, declare the recognition by the United States, in Congress assembled, of the said government of such State; and from the date of such proclamation the said government shall be entitled to the guarantee and all other rights of a State government under the Constitution of the United States; but this act shall not operate a recognition of a State government in either of said States till the conditions aforesaid are complied with, and till that time those States shall be subject to this law.

Other sections provide for an enrollment, on the sufficient return of the people of any State to their obedience to the Constitution, of all white male citizens of the United States resident in the State in their respective counties, and upon a majority (including those in the United States military and naval service) taking the oath of allegiance, the loyal people are to elect delegates equal in number to the number of both houses of the State Legislature. The voters are the loyal male citizens of the United States, of the age of twenty-one years, and enrolled and resident at the time in the district in which they offer to vote, and those absent in the military service of the United States. "No person who has held or exercised any office, civil or military, State or confederate, under the rebel usurpation, or who has voluntarily borne arms against the United States, shall vote or be eligible to be elected as delegate at such election." If the Convention shall declare, on behalf of the people of the State, their submission to the Constitution and laws of the United States, and shall incorporate the following provisions into the Constitution of the State:

First. No person who has held or exercised any office, civil or military, except civil offices merely ministerial and military offices below the grade of colonel, State or confederate, under the usurping power, shall vote for or be a member of the legislature or governor.

Second. Involuntary servitude is forever prohibited, and the freedom of all persons is guaranteed in said State.

Third. No debt or confederate, created by or under the sanction of the usurping power, or in any manner in aid thereof, shall be recognized or paid by the State.

And the Constitution be then ratified by a majority of the voters qualified as aforesaid, the President shall, by proclamation, recognize the State government thus established, and from that date, senators and representatives, and presidential electors may be chosen.

1865, January 16—Mr. KELLEY moved to amend by adding to the white citizens enrolled, "and all other male citizens of the United States who may be able to read the Constitution thereof."

Mr. ELIOT moved the following as a substitute, the third section having been accepted by him when offered, as a separate proposition, by Mr. Arnold:

That the States declared to be in rebellion against the United States, and within which the authority of the Constitution and laws of the United States has been overthrown, shall not be permitted to resume their political relations with the government of the United States until, by action of the loyal citizens within such States, respectively, a State constitution shall be ordained and established, republican in form, forever prohibiting involuntary servitude within such State, and guaranteeing to all persons freedom and equality of rights before the law.

SEC. 2. That the State of Louisiana is hereby permitted to resume its political relations with the government of the United States under the constitution adopted by the convention which assembled on the sixth day of April, anno Domini eighteen hundred and sixty-four, at New Orleans.

SEC. 3. That in all that portion of the United States heretofore declared to be in rebellion against the United States, and enumerated in the President's proclamation of January 1, 1863, slavery and involuntary servitude, otherwise than in the punishment of crime whereof the accused shall have been duly convicted, shall be, and the same hereby is, abolished and prohibited forever, and the re-enslavement, or holding, or attempting to hold in slavery or involuntary servitude, any person within such States made free by this act, or declared to be free by the proclamation of the President of the United States, dated January 1, 1863, or of any of their descendants, otherwise than in the punishment of crime whereof the accused shall have been duly convicted, is and shall be forever prohibited, any law or regulation of either of said States to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. WILSON moved to substitute the following :

Senators and Representatives shall not be received from any State heretofore declared in rebellion against the United States until by an act or joint resolution of Congress, approved by the President, or passed notwithstanding his objections, such State shall have been first declared to have organized a just local government, republican in form, and to be entitled to representation in the respective Houses of Congress.

January 17—The bill was postponed to February—yeas 103, nays 34.

February 21—Mr. ASHLEY offered, on behalf of the committee, a substitute, which differed chiefly in this respect from the original bill. The section recognizing the State governments of Louisiana and Arkansas was omitted, and this substituted for it :

That if the persons exercising the functions of Governor and Legislature under the rebel usurpation in any State heretofore declared to be in rebellion shall, before armed resistance to the national Government is suppressed in such State, submit to the authority of the United States, and take the oath to support the Constitution of the United States, and adopt by law the third provision prescribed in the eighth section of this act, and ratify the amendment to the Constitution of the United States proposed by Congress to the Legislatures of the several States on the 31st day of January, A. D. 1865, it shall be lawful for the President of the United States to recognize the said Governor and Legislature as the lawful State government of such State, and to certify the fact to Congress for its recognition: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall operate to disturb the boundary lines of any States heretofore recognized by and now represented in the Congress of the United States.

Mr. KELLEY's amendment was modified so as to provide for striking out the word "white" in the enrollment section.

Mr. WILSON modified his substitute, so as to make it read :

That Senators and Representatives shall not be received from any State heretofore declared in rebellion against the United States until Congress, by concurrent action of both Houses, shall have first declared a just local government, republican in form, to have been organized therein, and such State to be entitled to representation in the respective Houses of Congress.

Mr. ELIOT modified his, so as to make it read :

That the States declared to be in rebellion against the United States, and within which the authority of the Constitution and laws of the United States has been overthrown, shall not be permitted to resume their political relations with the Government of the United States, until, by action of the loyal citizens within such States respectively, a State constitution shall be ordained and established, republican in form, forever prohibiting involuntary servitude within said State, and guaranteeing to all persons freedom and equal rights before the law.

On motion of Mr. MALLORY, the bill was laid on the table—yeas 92, nays 64, as follows :

YEAS—Messrs. James C. Allen, Ancona, Anderson, Baily, Augustus C. Baldwin, Blair, Bliss, Boyd, William G. Brown, Chandler, Cary, Cobb, Coffroth, Coz, Cravens, Thomas T. February 22—Mr. WILSON, from the Judiciary Committee, reported this bill :

That neither the people nor the Legislature of any State, the people of which were declared to be in insurrection against the United States by the proclamation of the President, dated August 16, 1861, shall hereafter elect Representatives or Senators to the Congress of the United States until the President, by proclamation, shall have declared that armed hostility to the Government of the United States within such State has ceased; nor until the people of such State shall have adopted a constitution of government not repugnant to the Constitution and laws of the United States; nor until, by a law of Congress, such State shall have been declared to be entitled to representation in the Congress of the United States of America.

Mr. ASHLEY offered, as a substitute, the bill offered by him yesterday.

Mr. KELLEY moved to strike out the word "white" from the Enrollment section.

Mr. BLAIR moved that the bill be tabled; which was agreed to—yeas 80, nays 65, as follows :

YEAS—Messrs. James C. Allen, Ancona, Anderson, Baily, Blair, Bliss, Brooks, William G. Brown, Chandler, Clay, Cobb, Coz, Cravens, Dawes, Dawson, Denison, Eden, Edgerton, Eldridge, English, Fink, Ganson, Gooch, Grider, Griswold, Hall, Harding, Harrington, Benjamin G. Harris, Charles M. REPRESENTATION IN THE ELECTORAL COLLEGE.

IN HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

1865, January 30—Mr. WILSON reported from the Committee on the Judiciary this resolution, which was passed without a division : Joint resolution declaring certain States not entitled to representation in the electoral college.

Whereas the inhabitants and local authorities of the States of Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas, Arkansas, and Tenne see rebelled against the government of the United States, and have continued in a state of armed rebellion for more than three years, and were in said state of armed rebellion on the eighth day of November, eighteen hundred and sixty-four: Therefore,

Be it resolved, &c., That the States mentioned in the preamble to this joint resolution are not entitled to representation in the electoral college for the choice of President and Vice-President of the United States for the term of office commencing on the fourth day of March, eighteen hundred and sixty-five; and no electoral votes shall be received or counted from said States concerning the choice of President and Vice-President for said term of office.

IN SENATE.

February 1—Mr. TRUMBULL reported it from the Judiciary Committee, with this amendment:

To strike from the preamble these words: "And have continued in a state of armed rebellion for more than three years, and were in said state of armed rebellion on the 8th day of November, 1864."

And substitute these: "And were in such state of rebellion on the 8th day of November, 1864, that no valid election for President and Vice-President of the United States according to the Constitution and laws thereof was held therein on said day."

Which was agreed to, in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. TEN EYCK moved to strike from the preamble the word "Louisiana."

Mr. COLLAMER moved this as a substitute for the preamble and resolution:

That the people of no State, the inhabitants whereof have been declared in a State of insurrection by virtue of the fifth section of the act entitled "An act further to provide for the collection of duties on imports, and for other purposes," approved March 17, 1861, shall be regarded as empowered to elect electors of President and Vice-President of the United States until said condition of insurrection shall cease and be so declared by virtue of a law of the United States, or until they shall be represented in both houses of Congress.

Nor shall any vote cast by any such electors elected by the votes of the inhabitants of any such State, or the Legislature thereof, be received or counted.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana, moved to postpone the resolution indefinitely, which was lost—yeas 11, nays 26, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Cowan, Doolittle, Farwell, Harlan, Harris, Howe, Lane of Indiana, Nesmith, Ten Eyck, Van Winkle, Willey—11.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Buckalew, Clark, Collamer, Conness, Davis, Dixon, Foster, Hale, Henderson, Howard, Johnson, Lane of Kansas, Morgan, Morrill, Nye, Powell, Sherman, Sprague, Stewart, Sumner, Trumbull, Wade, Wilkinson, Wilson, Wright—26.

1865, February 3—Mr. TEN EYCK's amendment was not agreed to—yeas 15, nays 22, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Cowan, Dixon, Doolittle, Farwell, Harlan, Harris, Howe, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, Nesmith, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Ten Eyck, Van Winkle, Willey—15.

NAYS—Messrs. Brown, Buckalew, Chandler, Clark, Collamer, Conness, Davis, Foster, Henderson, Hendricks, Howard, Johnson, Morgan, Morrill, Powell, Sprague, Sherman, Stewart, Sumner, Trumbull, Wade, Wilkinson, Wilson, Wright—22.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas, moved to strike out the preamble, which was not agreed to—yeas 12, nays 30, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Cowan, Doolittle, Harlan, Harris, Howe, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, Nesmith, Pomeroy, Ten Eyck, Van Winkle, Willey—12.

NAYS—Messrs. Brown, Buckalew, Chandler, Clark, Conness, Davis, Dixon, Farwell, Foster, Grimes, Hale, Henderson, Hendricks, Howard, Johnson, Morgan, Morrill, Nye, Powell, Ramsey, Saulsbury, Sherman, Sprague, Stewart, Sumner, Trumbull, Wade, Wilkinson, Wilson, Wright—30.

Mr. HARRIS moved to amend by substituting as follows:

Whereas in pursuance of an act of Congress approved on the 13th day of July, 1861, the President did, on the 16th day of August, 1861, declare the inhabitants of certain

States, and among others the States of Tennessee and Louisiana, to be in a state of insurrection against the United States: and whereas, with a view to encourage the inhabitants of such States to resume their allegiance to the United States and to reorganize loyal State governments, the President, on the 8th day of December, 1863, issued his proclamation, whereby it was declared, among other things, that in case a State Government should be re-established in any of said States, in a manner therein specified, such government should be recognized as the true government of the State; and whereas the loyal inhabitants of the States of Tennessee and Louisiana, invited so to do by the said last mentioned proclamation, have in good faith established State governments loyal to the United States, or attempted so to do; and whereas such loyal inhabitants at the recent presidential election have chosen electors of President and Vice-President, who have in pursuance of the requirement of the Constitution, cast their votes for the President and Vice-President; and whereas doubts exist as to the validity of such election of presidential electors in the said States of Tennessee and Louisiana; and whereas it is well understood that the result of the presidential election could in no way be affected by the votes of the said States, whether the same be counted or not: Therefore,

Be it resolved, &c., That it is inexpedient to determine the question as to the validity of the election of electors in the said States of Tennessee and Louisiana, and that in counting the votes for President and Vice-President the result be declared as it would stand if the votes of the said States were counted, and also as it would stand if the votes of the said States were excluded, such result being the same in either case.

Which was rejected—yeas 12, nays 31, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Cowan, Doolittle, Farwell, Harris, Howe, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, Nesmith, Pomeroy, Ten Eyck, Van Winkle, Willey—12.

NAYS—Messrs. Brown, Buckalew, Chandler, Clark, Collamer, Conness, Davis, Dixon, Foster, Grimes, Hale, Harlan, Henderson, Hendricks, Howard, Johnson, Morgan, Morrill, Nye, Powell, Ramsey, Saulsbury, Sherman, Sprague, Stewart, Sumner, Trumbull, Wade, Wilkinson, Wilson, Wright—31.

February 4—Mr. COLLAMER's amendment was rejected—yeas 13, nays 27, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Clark, Collamer, Dixon, Farwell, Foot, Harlan, Howard, Lane of Kansas, Ramsey, Sumner, Wilson—13.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Chandler, Conness, Cowan, Davis, Doolittle, Foster, Hale, Harris, Henderson, Hendricks, Howe, Johnson, Lane of Indiana, Morgan, Morrill, Nye, Pomeroy, Powell, Saulsbury, Sherman, Stewart, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Willey, Wright—27.

The joint resolution as amended being reported to the Senate,

Mr. POMEROY moved to strike out the words "state of rebellion" and insert in lieu thereof the word "condition;" which was adopted—yeas 26, nays 13, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Buckalew, Chandler, Clark, Conness, Davis, Dixon, Doolittle, Farwell, Foot, Harlan, Harris, Henderson, Hendricks, Lane of Kansas, Morgan, Pomeroy, Powell, Ramsey, Saulsbury, Sherman, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Willey, Wilson—26.

NAYS—Messrs. Collamer, Cowan, Foster, Grimes, Hale, Howard, Johnson, Morrill, Nye, Stewart, Ten Eyck, Wade, Wright—13.

The amendment as amended was then agreed to—yeas 32 nays 6, (Messrs. Cowan, Foot, Johnson, Ten Eyck, Van Winkle, Willey.)

Mr. LANE, of Kansas, moved to strike out the preamble, and to strike out after the word "States," in the first line of the resolution, the words "mentioned in the preamble," and to insert in lieu of them "of Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas, Arkansas, and Tennessee."

Which was rejected—yeas 7, nays 30, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Cowan, Doolittle, Harris, Lane of Kansas, Nesmith, Van Winkle, Willey—7.

And the resolution passed—yeas 29, nays 10:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Buckalew, Chandler, Clark, Collamer, Conness, Davis, Dixon, Farwell, Foster, Grimes, Hale, Harlan, Henderson, Hendricks, Howard, Johnson, Morgan, Morrill, Nye, Powell, Ramsey, Sherman, Stewart, Sumner, Trumbull, Wade, Wright—29.

NAYS—Messrs. Cowan, Doolittle, Harris, Howe, Lane of Kansas, Nesmith, Saulsbury, Ten Eyck, Van Winkle, Wiley—10.

February 4—The House concurred in the amendments.

Pending this question, Mr. YEAMAN proposed to offer this substitute for the resolution, but, on the point being raised, it was ruled out of order at that stage:

That the votes of the Presidential electors of any State shall be counted when presented and verified in the ordinary and legal method: and it is incompetent and immaterial for Congress to go behind such verification, and inquire whether a part of the citizens of such State may have been in rebellion: and all laws and parts of laws and joint resolutions incompatible with this are hereby repealed.

February 10—This message from the PRESIDENT was laid before the Senate:

To the honorable the Senate and

House of Representatives:

The joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution declaring certain States not entitled to representation in the Electoral College" has been signed by the Executive, in deference to the view of Congress implied in its passage and presentation to him. In his own view, however, the two Houses of Congress, convened under the twelfth article of the Constitution, have complete power to exclude from counting all electoral votes deemed by them to be illegal; and it is not competent for the Executive to defeat or obstruct that power by a veto, as would be the case if his action were at all essential in the matter. He disclaims all right of the Executive to interfere in any way in the matter of canvassing or counting electoral votes, and he also disclaims that, by signing said resolution, he has expressed any opinion on the recitals of the preamble, or any judgment of his own upon the subject of the resolution.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 8, 1865.

THE LOUISIANA QUESTION.

IN SENATE.

1864, December 7—The credentials of Charles Smith and R. King Cutler, as Senators, were presented, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

1865, February 18—Mr. TRUMBULL made this writen report:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom were referred the credentials of R. King Cutler and Charles Smith, claiming seats from the State of Louisiana, report:

That in the early part of eighteen hundred and sixty-one the constituted authorities of the State of Louisiana undertook to withdraw that State from the Union, and so far succeeded in the attempt as by force of arms to expel from the State for a time the authority of the United States, and set up a government in hostility thereto.

Since that time the United States, as a necessity to the maintaining of its legitimate authority in Louisiana as one of the States of the Union, has been compelled to take possession thereof by its military forces, and, in the absence of any local organizations or civil magistrates loyal to the Union, temporarily to govern the same by military power.

While a large portion of the State, embracing more than two-thirds of its population, was thus under the control of the military power, steps were taken, with its sanction, and to some extent under its direction, for the reorganization of a State government loyal to the government of the United States. The first action had looking to such reorganization was a registration of the loyal persons within the limits of military control entitled to vote under the constitution and laws of Louisiana at the beginning of the rebellion. The lists thus made up contain the names of between fifteen and eighteen thousand voters, which is represented to be more than half the number of voters in the same parishes previous to the rebellion, and more than two-thirds of the voting population within the same localities at the time the registry was taken. The next step taken in the reorganization of the State government was the election of State officers on the 22d of February, 1864, under the auspices of the military authority acting in conjunction with prominent and influential citizens. At this election 11,411 votes were polled, 805 of which were cast by soldiers and sailors—citizens of Louisiana, who would not have been entitled to vote under the constitution of Louisiana as it existed prior to the rebellion, for the sole reason that they were in the military service, but who possessed in other respects all the qualifications of voters required by that instrument. The balance, 10,606, were legal voters under the constitution of the State prior to the rebellion. The third step in the reorganization of the State government was to call a convention for the amendment of the constitution of the State. Delegates to this convention were elected March 28, 1864, under the joint and harmonious direction of the military authorities, and the State officers who had been elected on the 22d February previous. In a paper submitted to the committee by Major General Banks he states that delegates were apportioned to every election district in the State, both within and beyond the lines, so that if beyond the lines of the army the people of the State had chosen to participate in that election, the delegates might have been received if they had shown themselves loyal to the government. They were about 150 in number. All elections subsequent to that for delegates have been ordered and controlled by the representatives of the people.

In the organization of the convention it was provided that a majority of the whole number apportioned to the State, if every district within and beyond the lines had been represented, should constitute a quorum for the transaction of business. Every vote in the convention, from a question of order to the ratification of the constitution, was conducted under this rule, and was approved by a majority of all the delegates apportioned to the State if every district had been represented.

The delegates met in convention, in the city of New Orleans, on the 6th day of April, 1864, remained in session till July 23, 1864, and adopted a constitution, republican in form, and in entire harmony with the Constitution of the United States and the great principles of human liberty.

This constitution was submitted, by the convention which adopted it, to the people for ratification, on the first Monday of September, 1864, and adopted by a vote of 6,826 for, to 1,566 against it.

At the same time the vote was taken on the adoption of the constitution, a legislature was elected, representing all those parishes of the State reclaimed from insurgent control, and embracing about two thirds of its population. This legislature assembled at New Orleans on the 2d day of October, 1864, and proceeded to put in operation a State government by providing for levying and collecting taxes, the establishment of tribunals for the administration of justice, the adoption of a system of education, and such other measures as were necessary to the re-establishment of a State government in harmony with the Constitution and laws of the United States. The State government thus inaugurated has been in successful operation since the period of its establishment, and your committee are assured that if no exterior hostile force is permitted to enter the State, the local State government is fully equal to the maintaining of peace and tranquillity throughout the State, in subordination to the Constitution and laws of the United States.

The manner in which the new State government was inaugurated is not wholly free from objection. The local State authorities having rebelled against the government, and there being no State or local officers in existence loyal to its authority, in taking the initiatory steps for a reorganization, some irregularities were unavoidable, and the number of voters participating in this reorganization is less than would have been desirable. Yet, when we take into consideration the large number of voters who had left the State in consequence of the rebellion, who had fallen in battle, or were absent at the time of the election, both in the Union and rebel armies, and the difficulties attending the obtaining of a full vote from those remaining, in consequence of the unsettled condition of affairs in the State, and the further fact that the adoption of the amended constitution was not seriously opposed, and therefore the question of its ratification not calculated to call out a full vote, the number of votes cast is perhaps as large as could have been expected, and the State government which has been reorganized, as your committee believe, fairly represents a majority of the loyal voters of the State.

Appended hereto is a copy of the various orders and proclamations issued in regard to the election of State officers, delegates to the Constitutional convention, and members of the legislature, and also a copy of election laws and instructions relative to the duties of commissioners of elections, issued for the guidance of officers in conducting said election.

Messrs. Cutler and Smith, the claimants for seats, were duly elected senators by the legislature which convened on the third day of October, 1861, and but for the fact that, in pursuance of an act of Congress passed on the 13th day of July, 1861, the inhabitants of the State of Louisiana were declared to be in a state of insurrection against the United States, and all commercial intercourse between them and the citizens of other States declared to be unlawful, which condition of things had not ceased at the time of the reorganization of the State government and the election of Messrs. Cutler and Smith, your committee would recommend their immediate admission to seats.

The persons in possession of the local authorities of Louisiana having rebelled against the authority of the United States, and her inhabitants having been declared to be in a state of insurrection in pursuance of a law passed by the two Houses of Congress, your committee deem it improper for this body to admit to seats senators from Louisiana, till by some joint action of both Houses there shall be some recognition of an existing State government acting in harmony with the government of the United States, and recognizing its authority.

Your committee therefore recommend for adoption, before taking definite action upon the right of the claimants to seats, the accompanying joint resolution.

The joint resolution is as follows:

Resolved, &c. That the United States do hereby recognize the government of the State of Louisiana, inaugurated under and by the convention which assembled on the 6th day of April, A. D. 1864, at the city of New Orleans, as the legitimate government of the said State, and entitled to the guarantees and all other rights of a State government under the Constitution of the United States.

February 23—Mr. SUMNER moved this substitute:

That neither the people nor the Legislature of any State, the people of which were declared to be in insurrection against the United States by the proclamation of the President, dated August 16, 1861, shall hereafter elect Representatives or Senators to the Congress of the United States until the President, by proclamation, shall have declared that armed hostility to the Government of the United States within such State has ceased; nor until the people of such State shall have adopted a constitution of government not repugnant to the Constitution and laws of the United States; nor until, by a law of Congress, such State shall have been declared to be entitled to representation in the Congress of the United States of America.

Which was not agreed to—yeas 8, nays 29, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Brown, Conness, Grimes, Howard, Sprague, Stewart, Sumner, Wade—8.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Buckalew, Carlile, Collamer, Cowan, Dixon, Doolittle, Farwell, Foster, Ha'e, Harlan, Harris, Hendricks, Johnson, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, Morgan, Morrill, Nesmith, Nye, Pomeroy, Powell, Ramsey, Richardson, Riddle, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, Willey, Wright—29.

February 25—Mr. SUMNER gave notice of his intention to offer this substitute at the proper time:

That it is the duty of the United States, at the earliest practicable moment consistent with the common defence and the general welfare, to re-establish by act of Congress republican governments in those States where loyal governments have been vacated by the existing rebellion, and thus, to the full extent of their power, fulfil the requirement of the Constitution, that "the United States shall guarantee to every State in this Union a republican form of government."

Sec. 2. That this important duty is imposed by the Constitution in express terms on "the United States," and not on individuals or classes of individuals, or on any military commander or executive officer, and cannot be entrusted to any such persons, acting, it may be, for an oligarchical class, and in disregard of large numbers of loyal people; but it must be performed by the United States, represented by the President and both Houses of Congress, acting for the whole people thereof.

Sec. 3. That, in determining the extent of this duty, and in the absence of any precise definition of the term "republican form of government," we cannot err, if, when called to perform this guarantee under the Constitution, we adopt the self-evident truths of the Declaration of Independence as an authoritative rule, and insist that in every re-establishlished State the consent of the governed shall be the only just foundation of government, and all men shall be equal before the law.

Sec. 4. That, independent of the Declaration of Independence, it is plain that any duty imposed by the Constitution must be performed in conformity with justice and reason, and in the light of existing facts; that, therefore, in the performance of this guarantee, there can be no power under the Constitution to disfranchise loyal people, or to recognize any such disfranchisement, especially when it may hand over the loyal majority to the government of the disloyal minority; nor can there be any power under the Constitution to discriminate in favor of the rebellion by admitting to the electoral franchise rebels who have forfeited all rights and by excluding loyal persons who have never forfeited any right.

Sec. 5. That the United States, now called at a crisis of history to perform this guarantee, will fail in duty under the Constitution, should they allow the re-establishment of any State without proper safeguards for the rights of all the citizens, and especially without making it impossible for rebels now in arms against the national government to trample upon the rights of those who are now fighting the battles of the Union.

Sec. 6. That the path of justice is also the path of peace, and that for the sake of peace it is better to obey the Constitution, and, in conformity with its requirements in the performance of the guarantee, to re-establish State governments on the consent of the governed and the equality of all persons before the law, to the end that the foundations thereof may be permanent, and that no loyal majorities may be again overthrown or ruled by any oligarchical class.

Sec. 7. That a government founded on military power, or having its origin in military orders, cannot be a "republican form of government" according to the requirement of the Constitution; and that its recognition will be contrary not only to the Constitution, but also to that essential principle of our government which, in the language of Jefferson, establishes "the supremacy of the civil over the military authority."

Sec. 8. That in the States whose governments have been already vacated, a government founded on an oligarchical class, even if erroneously recognized as a "republican form of government" under the guarantee of the Constitution, cannot sustain itself securely without national support; that such an oligarchical government is not competent at this moment to discharge the duties and execute the powers of a State; and that its recognition as a legitimate government will tend to enfeeble the Union, to postpone the day of reconciliation, and to endanger the national tranquillity.

Sec. 9. That considerations of expediency are in harmony with the requirements of the Constitution and the dictates of justice and reason, especially now, when colored soldiers have shown their military value; that as their muskets are needed for the national defence against rebels in the field, so are their ballots yet more needed against the subtle enemies of the Union at home; and that without their support at the ballot-box the cause of human rights and of the Union itself will be in constant peril.

February 25—Mr. SUMNER offered this proviso to be added to the resolution:

Provided, That this shall not take effect except upon the fundamental condition that within the State there shall be no denial of the electoral franchise, or of any other rights on account of color or race, but all persons shall be equal before the law. And the Legislature of the State, by a solemn public act, shall declare the assent of the State to this fundamental condition, and shall transmit to the President of the United States an authentic copy of such assent whenever the same shall be adopted, upon the receipt whereof he shall, by proclamation, announce the fact; whereupon, without any further proceedings on the part of Congress, this joint resolution shall take effect.

Mr. HENDERSON moved to insert after the word "race," the words "or sex."

After debate, Mr. WADE moved the postponement of the further consideration of the subject until the first Monday of December next; which was not agreed to—yeas 12, nays 17, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Brown, Buckalew, Carlile, Chandler, Davis, Hendricks, Howard, Powell, Riddle, Sumner, Wade, Wright—12.

NAYS—Messrs. Clark, Dixon, Doolittle, Foot, Foster, Harlan, Henderson, Howe, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, Morgan, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, Willey, Wilson—17.

The remainder of the sitting was consumed in formal motions to adjourn, and in debate; and the subject was not again reached during the session.

IN HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

1864, December 13—Mr. ELLIOT offered a joint resolution declaring that the State of Louisiana may resume its political relations with the Government of the United States. Referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

1865, February 11—Mr. DAWES, from the Committee on Elections, made this report:

The Committee on Elections, to whom were referred the credentials of M. F. Bonzano, claiming a seat in this house as a representative from the first congressional district in Louisiana, submit the following report:

The election upon which Mr. Bonzano claims the seat was held on the 5th of September, 1864. The number of votes cast was—

For Mr. Bonzano.....	1,609
For all others.....	1,456
Total.....	3,065

This election derives its authority from the constitutional convention which commenced its session in New Orleans, April 6, 1864, which amended essentially and adopted anew the constitution of Louisiana, and, among other things, did on the 22d of July, 1864, divide the State into five congressional districts, in accordance with the number of representatives assigned to that State in the apportionment under the census of 1860, and ordered an election to be held on the first Monday of September, 1864, to fill the vacancies caused by the failure of the State hitherto to elect representatives to the present Congress. As the election under consideration derives its authority from this convention, a recital of the main facts connected with the origin and action of that convention becomes necessary to a proper understanding of the subject.

From nearly the commencement of the rebellion till the appearance of the federal fleet under Commodore Farragut before the city of New Orleans in April, 1862, the State had been overrun by the rebel armies, and the governor had traitorously abandoned his duty and post, leaving the people without loyal government, and delivered over to the rebellion. Upon the taking possession of New Orleans by General Butler on the 1st of May following, he issued a proclamation, in which, among other things, he invited "all persons well disposed towards the government of the United States" to renew their oath of allegiance, and promised to such the protection of the armies of the United States. Under this proclamation sixty-one thousand three hundred and eighty-two (61,382) citizens took the oath of allegiance before the close of the following October. Subsequently, as the rebel army retired from other portions of the State, and the federal army advanced and extended its lines, the citizens of the districts or parishes thus delivered from the restraint of the rebellion also promptly came forward and renewed their allegiance to the government of the Union. Soldiers, white and black, enlisted into the armies of the Union, and in New Orleans many of the citizens formed themselves into home-guards, to assist the federal authorities in case of an attack by the rebels.

As fast as new parishes were brought into the federal lines and the people in sufficiently large numbers renewed their allegiance, and recognized the authority of the United States, the military governor of the State appointed judges, justices of the peace, clerks of courts, sheriffs, constables, and other civil officers, and performed all the acts which legally and constitutionally devolve upon the governor of Louisiana. In all of which her loyal citizens acquiesced and rendered an unquestioned obedience.

Under a proclamation issued by the then military governor, November 14, 1862, an election was held December 3, 1862, for representatives in the 37th Congress from the first and second congressional districts of the State, under the old apportionment and the law of Louisiana as it existed before the rebellion. In the first, 2,643 votes, and in the second 5,117 votes were cast at this election. And the gentlemen claiming to have been thus duly elected presented their credentials to the last Congress, which, after careful examination and full discussion, admitted them to seats as members. The admission of these representatives to seats, and the opportunity which it gave to the loyal sentiment of the State to be heard and make itself manifest, had a most salutary effect upon the people of that State, and from that time the desire for a new State government and a resumption of State functions rapidly increased throughout all that portion of the State within our lines.

The major general commanding in the department of the Gulf, yielding to the pressure from all sides that he would give direction to some practical end to the efforts which this desire on the part of the people was prompting to reorganize and re-establish their State government, did, under the direction of the President, issue on January 11, 1864, a proclamation which is annexed to this report, inviting the people of Louisiana to participate in an election on the 22d of February of State officers under the constitution and laws of the State, except so far as they related to the subject of slavery, which were declared to be to that extent suspended and inoperative. Several orders intended to secure freedom of election and conformity as far as possible to the laws of Louisiana previous to the rebellion were issued by the general commanding, and the evidence is satisfactory to the committee that to the extent of the federal lines this election was general, conducted in good order, free from military or other control, and largely participated in by the people.

It resulted in the election of State officers by a vote of 11,414. At this election no person voted who was not by the constitution and laws of Louisiana a voter, except soldiers and sailors in the service of the United States who were citizens of Louisiana and in the State at the time of the election, to the number of 808. All who voted took the oath prescribed by the President in his proclamation of December 8, 1863.

These officers were installed on the 4th of March following at New Orleans, in presence and with the acclaim of a large concourse of people, estimated at 50,000. On the eleventh of the same month the commanding general issued another order, which accompanies this report, calling for an election of delegates to a convention for the revision and amendment of the constitution of the State. The governor by a proclamation joined in this call. All parties were consulted in reference to this election, and differed only as to the time of holding it.

This convention commenced its sessions at New Orleans, April 6, 1864, and adjourned on the 25th of July. The entire proceedings and debates of this body have been laid upon the tables of the members of this house. The most important changes in the constitution of the State proposed by it were those in relation to slavery. The following were adopted by it, as the first and second articles of the constitution:

TITLE I.

EMANCIPATION.

ARTICLE 1. Slavery and involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime, whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, are hereby forever abolished and prohibited throughout the State.

ARTICLE 2. The legislature shall make no law recognizing the right of property in man.

The proceedings of the convention were, by proclamation of the governor, submitted to the people for ratification or rejection on September 5, 1864, and were ratified without material opposition. The whole number of votes was over 9,000.

This constitutional convention, by an ordinance adopted, divided the State into five Congressional districts, and directed elections for representatives to the present Congress to be held in them on the 5th September, 1864. And in accordance with said ordinance, the governor issued his proclamation directing elections to be held in accordance with it. In pursuance of this ordinance of the convention and proclamation of the governor, elections were held in these several districts for representatives in this Congress; and in the first, M. F. Bonzano received 1,609 votes out of 3,065 cast. The governor gave him, accordingly, a certificate of his election, which has been presented to the House and referred to this committee.

The committee have heard Mr. Bonzano in his own behalf, as also Mr. Field, who claims to have been elected at the same time in the second district, General Banks, and others. The information and arguments submitted by them accompany this report.

This election depends for its validity upon the effect which the House is disposed to give to the efforts to reorganize a State government in Louisiana, which have here been briefly recited. The districting of the State for representatives, and the fixing of the time for holding the election, were the act of the convention. Indeed, the election of Governor and other State officers, as well as the existence of the convention itself, as well as its acts, are all parts of the same movements.

It is objected to their validity, that they neither originated in nor followed any pre-existing law of the State or nation. But the answer to this objection lies in the fact that in the nature of the case, neither a law of the State or nation to meet the case was a possibility. The State was attempting to rise out of the ruin caused by an armed overthrow of its laws. They had been trampled in the dust; and there existed nobody in the State to make an enabling act. Congress cannot pass an enabling act for a State. It is neither one of the powers granted by the several States to the general government, nor necessary to the carrying out of any of those powers; and all "the powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or the people." It is preposterous to have expected at the hands of the rebel authorities in Louisiana that, previous to the overthrow of the State government, they should prepare a legal form of proceeding for its restoration. In the absence of any such legal form prepared beforehand in the State, and like absence of power on the part of the general government under the delegated powers of the Constitution, it follows, that the power to restore a lost State government in Louisiana existed nowhere, or in "the people," the original source of all political power in this country. The people, in the exercise of that power, cannot be required to conform to any particular mode, for that presupposes a power to prescribe outside of themselves, which it has been seen does not exist. The result must be republican; for the people and the States have surrendered to the United States, to that extent, the power over their form of government in this, that "the United States shall guarantee to every State a republican form of government."

It follows, therefore, that if this work of reorganizing and re-establishing a State government was the work of the people, it was the legitimate exercise of an inalienable and inherent right, and, if republican in form, is entitled not only to recognition but to the "guaranty" of the Constitution.

The attention of the committee has therefore been directed to the inquiry how far this effort to restore constitutional government in Louisiana has been the work of the people. Those engaged in the traitorous attempt to destroy the government form no part of that people engaged in the patriotic effort to restore it. The government is to be made, if at all, for and by patriots and not by traitors. In answering another and essential question, whether a government once erected in that State will be able to maintain itself against domestic violence, traitors must be counted, but not for their voice in making the government itself. As well might the inmates of a State prison be enumerated and consulted upon determining the character of a code of laws designed for their government.

The evidence before the committee, and all the information they could obtain, satisfied them that the movement which resulted in the election of State officers, the calling of a convention to revise and amend the constitution, the ratification of such revision and amendment by a popular vote, and the subsequent election of representatives in Congress, was not only participated in by a large majority, almost a proaching to unanimity, of the loyal people of the State, but that that loyal people constituted a majority of all the people of the State. Making proper allowance for those who have been driven out by the rebellion, have gone into its ranks, or perished at its hands, and also for the sparsely settled and in some parts barren character of nearly all that portion of the State still outside of the federal lines compared with the populous and rich and fertile portions within, there can be but little doubt of the correctness of these conclusions. The committee refer to the accompanying statements for the extent, character, and population of the portions of the State within and outside the federal lines.

The committee find from all the facts that this election was held under the auspices of a new State organization which has arisen upon the ruins of the old, in as much conformity to law as the nature of the case would permit—in which the loyal people throughout the State acquiesced—and at this moment in the full discharge of all the functions of a State government. They entertain no doubt of the ability of this government to maintain itself against domestic violence if protected from enemies without. About forty thousand loyal Louisianians, white and black, are now in the armies of the Union, a force amply sufficient to overawe any lurking discontent, or punish any open resistance within its borders. The committee cannot doubt that it is the duty of Congress to encourage this effort to restore law and order in Louisiana. The precedents are many since the rebellion commenced, of the admission of members whose greater irregularities existed than in the present case. In the Louisiana case, in the last House, the committee held the following language, which was sustained by a very large vote in the House:

"Representation is one of the very essentials of a republican form of government, and no one doubts that the United States cannot fulfil this obligation without guaranteeing that representation here. It was in fulfillment of this obligation that the army of the Union entered New Orleans, drove out the rebel usurpation, and restored to the discharge of its appropriate functions the civil authority there. Its work is not ended till there is representation here. It cannot secure that representation through the aid of a rebel governor. Hence the necessity for a military governor to discharge such functions, both military and civil, which necessity imposes in the interim between the absolute reign of rebellion and the complete restoration of law. Suppose Governor Moore to be the only traitor in Louisiana: one of two things must take place. The people must remain unrepresented, or some one must assume to fix a time to hold these elections. Which alternative approaches nearest to republicanism, nearest to the fulfillment of our obligations to guarantee a republican form of government to that people—closing the door of representation, or recognizing as valid the time fixed by the military governor? Are this people to wait for representation here till their rebel governor returns to his loyalty and appoints a day for an election, or is the government to guarantee that representation as best it may? The committee cannot distinguish between this act of the military governor and the many civil functions he is performing every day, acquiesced in by everybody. To pronounce this illegal and refuse to recognize it, is to pronounce his whole administration void and a usurpation. But necessity put him there and keeps him there."

In another case, that of Andrew J. Clements, of Tennessee, the committee of the last House, after a careful examination of the whole subject, submitted a resolution, which was unanimously adopted by the House, in favor of his right to the seat he claimed, based upon the following conclusion:

"In conclusion, the committee, upon the whole evidence, find that on the day of election no armed force prevented any considerable number of voters in any part of the district from going to the polls, and that on that day, in conformity with the forms of law, two thousand votes at least were cast for the memorialist as a representative to this Congress, and none, so far as the committee know, for any other person. They therefore report the following resolution, and recommend its adoption."

The committee of the present House have had occasion repeatedly to state the same positions in coming to conclusions upon similar cases, in which they have been sustained by the House. They are strengthened in these conclusions upon a re-examination of them in the present case, and they therefore submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That M. F. Bonzano is entitled to a seat in this House as a representative from the first congressional district in Louisiana.

Messrs. SMITHERS and UPSON presented this minority report:

The undersigned, minority of the Committee of Elections, to which was referred a certain paper, purporting to be the credentials of M. F. Bonzano as representative from the first congressional district of the State of Louisiana, beg leave to submit the following views, dissenting from the report of the said committee as presented by the majority thereof:

Before proceeding to consider the facts presented by the meagre and unsatisfactory testimony produced before them, the undersigned deem it proper to suggest, briefly, their views of the condition of Louisiana, the true issue proposed for the consideration of this House, and the nature and amount of proof requisite to its proper determination.

The people of Louisiana, acting through their regularly constituted authorities, on the 11th day of December, 1860, ordered a convention and appointed the 23d day of January, 1861, for its assembling. Pursuant to the act of the legislature met on the day fixed. On the 25th of the same month an ordinance of secession was adopted by a vote of 113 yeas to 17 nays, which, by authority of the convention, was submitted for ratification and subsequently ratified by a vote of 20,448 to 17,296,* and afterward, on the 21st day of March, the same convention ratified the confederate constitution by a vote of 101 to 7.

In these proceedings, not only the regular authorities, but the people of Louisiana participated. In pursuance of the resolution of the people of that State acting through approved and organized bodies, the whole public property of the United States, including great treasure and vast quantities of munitions of war, was seized by public functionaries and transferred to the political organization styling itself "the Confederate States of America."

By official acts and resolutions the authorities of Louisiana, acting by force of the powers with which they were invested by the positive sanction of the people, declared the bonds which had theretofore attached that people to the Government of the United States to be disrupted and their allegiance to be transferred to another sovereignty. The government created by them went into existence and full operation, and there was no other government in the State of Louisiana nor any other organized body assuming or pretending to exercise civil functions, executive, legislative, or judicial. Thus was established a government de facto.

The operation of this act was very different as affecting the people and Government of the United States and the people and government of Louisiana. So far as the United States was concerned, and so far as her rights were to be affected, the act was wholly unconstitutional and void. It changed no relation of citizenship or allegiance, and her rights of jurisdiction and sovereignty remained unimpaired, only suspended in their exercise by the presence of a military power which prevented the operation of civil sovereignty and the enforcement of the laws through the civil magistracy. The necessity for the assertion of these rights by the suppression of armed resistance to her authority required a resort to force, and a manifestation of opposition by organized rebellion developed a condition of civil war, which to the ordinary incidents of sovereignty superadded the rights of a belligerent power. Thus the State of Louisiana became subject to the laws of war, and, rebellion in that State being yet unsuppressed, there has hitherto been no government there recognized by the United States, except the commander-in-chief of the army, and no law except the military code.

Though thus inoperative and ineffectual against the government and people of the Union, the acts of the people of Louisiana were sufficient to work a radical change in their relations to their former State government. By their revolutionary but voluntary actions they disorganized their own political society, abrogated their former political institutions, and erected in their stead a government operated by a magistracy acknowledging no allegiance to our Constitution, but holding and administering their offices in derogation of and in hostility to the authority and laws of the United States.

By these disorganizing acts the sovereign power of Louisiana reverted to the loyal people of that State, and was held in abeyance until such time as by the suppression of the rebellion and the overthrow of the usurping authority they should be rendered capable to resume the functions of government through the organic action of the people, manifesting their will by their voluntary choice of a government republican in form, and subordinate to the Constitution and laws of the United States.

Whether this has been accomplished is the primary question to be determined, for until there is an organized State, there is no right or capacity to be represented in the Congress of the United States.

In the determination of this question the burden of proof is on those who seek for admission, or claim any benefit under or by force of the establishment of such pretended government. It is matter of public history, recognized and certified by the official acts and declarations of this government, that the inhabitants of the State of Louisiana were in insurrection against the United States, and that such condition still remains wholly unchanged or unaffected by any rescission or modification thereof.

Has evidence been presented which authorizes this house to declare that the people of Louisiana, by any proper mode of expression, have changed the status in which they were placed by their own acts and established a republican government? Such only is the form contemplated by the Constitution; such only has any title to representation on this floor; such only is the United States bound to guarantee or authorized to recognize.

The indispensable quality of such government is that it shall emanate from the people, and not only must it be derived from the great body, but their agency in its organization must have been voluntary. The idea of restraint is incompatible with volition. The government must not only rest on the consent of the governed, but that consent must not be procured by force or intimidation.

It is not sufficient that the result may show that a government apparently republican has been created, but the creation must be the exercise of a will unaffected by the presence of an overawing power.

The erection of a State government is a purely civil act. It has no affinity or connection with martial law. The civil power is alone capable to distinguish or declare the fact of its establishment or the essential conditions of its existence. The Congress of the United States is the only body having authority, primarily, to recognize the government of a State. Neither the Executive nor any subordinate military commander has capacity to incept or consummate its creation. The undersigned do not insist that an act of Congress is necessary as a prerequisite to enable the people of Louisiana to form a government, but the judgment of Congress must be passed on the result of the action of the people, in the recognition of their act, before representatives can be entitled to admission on this floor. This house must be satisfied that their constitution is ordained in accordance with their deliberate and unforced will, before it can lend its sanction to the act or recognize its validity.

Two questions, therefore, are presented for consideration: 1. Did the great body of the loyal people of Louisiana, in fact, participate or clearly concur in the establishment of the government offered for recognition?

2. Was their act the result of their deliberate will and voluntary choice, unpermeated by military interference?

If both these questions are affirmatively answered, then the State government set up by the convention of 1864 is entitled to be recognized: if either is negated, then there can be no pretence of right to such recognition, or to the admission of representatives from the State of Louisiana.

In considering these questions, it is matter of regret that the testimony before the committee was so limited, being confined to the statements of Major General Banks and A. P. Field, and the evidence of R. V. Montague and Luther V. Parker, all produced by and in support of the right of the claimants.

No one appeared to contest the recognition of the State government, or to dispute the validity of the credentials of the proposed members. The committee had, therefore, no opportunity to examine witnesses adverse to them, although it is well understood that there are many who dissent from the action pretended to have been had in Louisiana, and we are compelled to decide this grave matter upon the ex parte declarations of persons interested in, or manifestly strongly affected toward, the recognition of the government inaugurated by the convention. With circumstances so unfavorable to a proper exhibition of the facts attending its organization, the undersigned proceed to consider the two material questions proposed:

1. Did the great body of the loyal people of Louisiana concur in the establishment of the State government demanding our recognition?

There are forty-eight parishes in the State of Louisiana, including the city of New Orleans. Of these, nineteen, to wit: Orleans, Ascension, Assumption, Avoyelles, East Baton Rouge, West Baton Rouge, Concordia, East Feliciana, Jefferson, Lafourche, Madison, Plaquemines, St. Bernard, St. James, St. John the Baptist, St. Mary, Terrebonne, Iberville, and Rapides, sent delegates by a total vote of about 6,500, leaving the residue of the State, or twenty-nine parishes, unrepresented; and at the election for the ratification of the constitution, held on the 6th of September, 1864, being also the day on which representatives to Congress were voted for, the number polled, as returned to the committee, was about 8,000, of which some 6,500 were cast in the city of New Orleans alone, the votes in the fourth and fifth congressional districts amounting, in the aggregate, to 676.

This convention was composed of ninety-five delegates, of which number the parish of Orleans was represented by sixty-three, leaving to the country parishes the residue of thirty-two. The undersigned have no definite information of the number of votes polled in each parish, either at the election of delegates, or on the question of ratification, nor the number cast for the constitution, nor, if any, against it, but they are enabled to furnish some indication of the vote outside of New Orleans by the sparse returns which they gather from the journal of the convention.

It appears that the parish of Ascension, within our lines and neighboring to New Orleans, and which in 1860 had a white population of 3,940, elected her delegates by 61 votes; that Plaquemines, with a white population in 1860 of 2,523, cast 246; and in the parish of Madison, the witness Montague was elected by a vote of 28.

It is admitted that elections were held only in the parishes included within our lines, and that these lines were the Teche on the one side and the Amite on the other, comprehending the parish or city of Orleans, and the neighboring parishes on the Mississippi. To a question propounded to General Banks as to what portion of the State voted, his reply was:

"All as far up as Point Coupee, and there were some men from the Red river who voted at Vidalia."

And in his statement he announces that—

"The city of New Orleans is really the State of Louisiana."

In 1860 there were 357,629 whites in the State, of whom 149,063, or much less than one-half, were in New Orleans, so that in no legitimate sense can it be said that it constitutes the State. It is incredible that there are not many loyal men, the test of loyalty being the willingness to take an oath of allegiance, who were entitled to suffrage upon the question of the formation of their government, but who, from the control of the public enemy, had no opportunity to vote. But assume the statement to be true, it is in evidence that there are not less than 13,000 registered and qualified voters in the city of New Orleans alone who have taken the oath prescribed by the proclamation of the President, and the vote cast at the ratification and the election for members of Congress demonstrates that not more than one-half the number of those entitled to vote in that city voted at that election, to say nothing of the residue of the State.

In the suggestions presented by General Banks to the Judiciary Committee of the Senate, he attempts to account for the meagre vote by the operation of three causes:

"1st. By the fact that no opposition to the constitution was manifested in public or private, and no special effort on the part of its friends was required to secure its adoption.

"2d. That the fact that much uncertainty existed as to the probable ratification of the form of government by the Congress of the United States, deterred many persons from supporting it who would gladly have done so had they known it to be in accordance with the wishes of the government; and,

"3d. From the belief that it was possible that the rebel authority in this State might hereafter be established, when persons participating in the reorganization would suffer in consequence of that act.

"These last considerations affected many perfectly well disposed and naturally loyal but timid persons.

"Had a contest upon the constitution been made by the opponents of emancipation, and had it been generally understood that the authority for organization would have been approved by the government of the United States, the vote in this election would not have been less than 15,000."

As to the cause first assigned, without intimating that General Banks does not speak according to his belief, in view of the testimony of Messrs. Field and Parker, who were doubtless better informed, the undersigned must be permitted to doubt the accuracy or extent of his knowledge; for it is unquestionable that there was much private if not public hostility to its ratification.

The other causes alleged are very striking, as demonstrating not the concurrence of the people, but exactly the reverse, and indicating a settled purpose not to have anything to do with the election. They found very sufficient grounds for not participating, and the undersigned suggest that they are fatal to the reasoning of General Banks.

Mr. Field felt the force of the objection on that point and endeavored to avoid it. In accounting for the paucity of the vote, he says:

"It may be asked, and with some propriety too, why did we not poll a larger vote? That was beyond our control. You see, the party representing the McClellan interest refused to vote. They would have no participation in the election. The party representing the interest of Mr. Durant would not vote for what they called a bogus government. We could not force them to vote. They were qualified, for they had taken the oath of allegiance."

Luther V. Parker, also, speaking in relation to the canvass, gives his experience and the result of his observation:

"The election was as fully canvassed as any, and those who wanted to speak and oppose the adoption of the constitution, spoke as freely as they would at any other time or place. I was one of the speakers at the election for members of Congress, and I know the contest was a sharp one. There were all the elements of opposition brought to bear that could be and in every shape and form. The only thing that we had trouble with was, that there were certain parties there who would not vote either one way or the other.

"Question. By Mr. Dawes. Why?

"Answer. They would not give any reason why.

"Question. Were they parties professing to be loyal?

"Answer. Parties reputed to be loyal, and we had no reason to believe them to be disloyal.

"Question. By Mr. Smithers. What proportion of such men was there?

"Answer. I cannot tell.

"Question. Was the number large or small?

"Answer. Pretty large.

"Question. By Mr. Dawes. Who represented those men who declined to participate in the election?

"Answer. I understood Durant and Fellows, and a few such men."

It is true that General Banks, in his statement, says, in reply to the question as to what portion of the loyal people of Louisiana are represented by the views which Mr. Durant entertains:

"There are not enough to appear at the polls. It is a party of chieftains without an army."

But it is manifest that those who are better acquainted with the facts place a higher estimate on their numerical strength, since they allege their defection as one of the chief reasons for the smallness of the vote.

General Banks, in his statement to the Senate Committee, estimates the number of registered voters within the Union lines at from 16,000 to 18,000; so that not more than one-half participated in the election of the new government, even of those within the lines actually held by the army, to say nothing of those who lived in all the State of Louisiana lying without our occupancy, and this, too, upon the supposition that every vote that was cast was in favor of ratification.

But it is argued that having an opportunity to vote, their refusal to avail themselves of the privilege was the fault of the reentrants, and that they are bound by the acts of those who exercise the power of suffrage.

From this proposition the undersigned wholly dissent. Whatever force the suggestion might have in the case of the choice of representatives or other officers chosen at an election established by and held in conformity with an existing law prescribing such election, they are unable to perceive its application to the creation of a government and the adoption of a constitution emanating and deriving its sanction from the original action of the people, much less to an election ordered by the military power without warrant of law. On the contrary, it was, in their judgment, requisite to the establishment of such government that it should have received the support and sanction of a majority of the loyal people of Louisiana.

In his statement to the committee, General Banks directs attention to the topography of the State of Louisiana, for the purpose of establishing the fact that the lands capable of production are along the river banks, and that the larger portion of arable and therefore inhabited lands are within the Union lines, suggesting thereby the presence of population.

Unless he intended this inference, it is difficult to discover the pertinency of the allusion or the value of his observations in this behalf. In this suggestion he has been even more unfortunate than in relation to the number of votes.

By computation from the photographed map furnished to the committee, it appears that within the lines nominally held by the Union arms, there are 982,714 acres of improved lands, while in the parishes wholly outside, and over which there is no pretence of control, there are 1,574,307 acres. This result is produced upon a calculation most favorable to the claimants, since it embraces parishes, such as Rapides, Concordia, Avoyelles, and St. Martin's, which, while nominally within our lines of control, are really abandoned. From this computation the parishes of Ibierville without and Assumption and St. Bernard within our lines are excluded, no data concerning them being furnished by the map.

Without pursuing this branch of the investigation further, the undersigned suggest that the first question should be negatively answered, and that, in view of the facts, it may be truly averred that the people of Louisiana did not participate or concur in the establishment of the government presented for recognition.

The second question is whether the government pretended to be formed was the result of the voluntary act of the people of Louisiana, unprocured by military interference.

This will be best answered by the history of its establishment, by the views of its authors, and its actual capability to effect the purposes for which civil governments are created.

It is testified by Major General Banks, and admitted, that the duty of organizing a Government in the State of Louisiana was committed by the President to General Shepley, then military governor of New Orleans, and to Thomas J. Durant, an eminent citizen of that city; that in pursuance of the power thus vested in them, they proceeded to some extent in the enrollment of voters and in developing sentiments of loyalty among the inhabitants. The work of reorganization not proceeding with sufficient rapidity to satisfy the Executive, in December, 1863, General Banks received a letter from that functionary, expressing his disappointment at the development of loyal feeling, and calling upon him to communicate the reason. To this letter General Banks replied that he could not explain the cause, but that if the President desired an enrollment of the loyal people, or a government organized, it could be done, and if the Executive would give him directions he would do it immediately. In answer to this profligate authority was conferred upon him to take such measures as he thought necessary to organize a loyal free State government by the people of Louisiana, without other suggestion or limitation.

The authority committed to the former agents of the President was revoked, and the trust was broadly and unrestrictedly confided to the major general commanding the department of the Gulf, the military representative of the commander-in-chief, ruling with absolute authority over the State to be reorganized, and of which State he declared that "the fundamental law was martial law." In pursuance of the authority, in execution of the trust, and in assurance of a complete redemption of the pledge made to the President, General Banks, on the 11th of January, 1864, issued an order for the election of State officers and indicated the 22d of February as the day of election, and subsequently, in consummation of the object with which he was charged, issued another order to which the undersigned call attention. In that order the following language is used:

"Those who have exercised or are entitled to the rights of citizens of the United States will be required to participate in the measures necessary for the re-establishment of civil government." "It is therefore a solemn duty resting upon all persons to assist in the earliest possible restoration of civil government. Let them participate in the measures suggested for this purpose. Opinion is free and candidates are numerous. Open hostility cannot be permitted—indifference will be treated as crime and faction as treason."

The undersigned regret that they have not a copy of the official order, but they have no doubt of the correctness of the quotation, as it is fully confirmed by the statement of Major General Banks before the committee. He thus speaks in relation to the election, and the orders issued by him relative thereto:

"I appealed very strongly to the people to take a part in the election. I thought it was necessary, and I said what I thought was right—that the loyal citizen who refused to take any part in the measures necessary for re-establishing the authority of the Government of the United States, or in its political institutions, could not be considered loyal, and had not an absolute claim to remain there. But it was never said to any man, 'You must vote'; 'You shall vote; if you do not you shall be sent away.' That idea never was enforced."

Let it be remembered that the question was not concerning the enforcement of obedience to the laws of the United States, it was not concerning the repression of hostility against its authority, but concerning the re-organization of their State government and the election of their municipal officers, which they had the absolute right to determine, and to which freedom of opinion and action was essential.

Let it also be remembered that, in his letter to the President, General Banks had declared that he could and promised that he would re-organize a State government in Louisiana; and that the purpose being so declared, the agent to effect it was the military commander, vested with complete control over the lives and fortunes of the voter, and holding in his hands the terrible engine of martial law.

In view of these facts, it appears to the undersigned to be the veriest sophistry to declare that "it was never said to any man, 'You must vote.'"

The order finds its counterpart in the letter of Mason to the Virginia electors, with the additional incentive to obedience that the major general had at his command all the machinery of military commissions, provost marshals, and files of bayonets, to enable him to carry his threat of banishment into speedy and unappealable execution.

It is no answer that he did not do it—it is no palliation that he did not mean to do it—the threat was clear and unequivocal, the power to enforce it was present, and no man but the major general himself could venture to determine that he would not execute it. The invitation was irresistible; the effect, invincible: people voted; Ilahm was declared elected, and the promise of the major general thus far redeemed.

Immediately following the gubernatorial election, an order issued from the same inexorable authority, commanding the choice of delegates to a convention, appointing the day of election and the time and place of its assemblage. In pursuance of this command, delegates were chosen, and the first paragraph of the record of the debates indicates their judgment as to the source of their power. This journal commences by the statement:

"This day being fixed by the general order of Major General Nathaniel P. Banks, commanding the United States forces in the department of the Gulf."

At a subsequent stage of their proceedings, on page 614 of the same journal, one of the most active and apparently influential members, afterwards elected a senator and now applying for admission, arguing their capacity to punish for an alleged contempt, thus defines the origin and power of the convention:

"We are not only a convention of the State of Louisiana, but a military power—created and emanating from no other source than the military power, and existing by virtue of civil authority of the Government of the United States."

With such high origin and unlimited power, it is somewhat ludicrous that it was powerless to arrest a simple citizen, but was compelled to request of General Banks to issue his order directing his provost marshal to take measures necessary to enable the sergeant-at-arms to bring a newspaper editor before the convention. So wholly dependent were they on the military authority, and so open in their acknowledgment, that they assembled at the command and sat in the shadow of the sword of the major general commanding the department of the Gulf.

Such and so directly under the instigation of General Banks being the reorganization of the pretended government, the undersigned invite attention to the question whether it is capable to fulfil the legitimate objects of its creation—the protection of the citizen in the enjoyment of his civil rights, in the maintenance of commercial intercourse, and the punishment of offenders against its own laws.

How far it is effective for the former will be manifest from an order issued by command of Major General Hurlbut, so late as December 21, 1864, and signed by Haral Robinson, colonel 1st Louisiana cavalry and provost marshal general. The order is in these words:

["Special Order No. 145.]

"1. The military approval on permits for plantation, family, and trade store supplies, when such permits do not exceed two hundred and fifty dollars, will in future be signed by order of the provost marshal general, by a commissioned officer on duty at this office. This signature shall be valid for all military posts and for the following parishes: St. Bernard, Plaquemines, Orleans, Jefferson, St. Charles, St. John Baptist, St. James, Lafourche, Terrebonne, and as much of Assumption and St. Mary as may be within our military lines."

So utterly unready are the people of Louisiana for civil government, that it is not permitted to the inhabitants to traffic even for family stores, without a military permit, within the parishes considered most loyal, and of these parishes there are only nine within the whole State in which such permit is available.

It such be its condition as to commercial intercourse among its own citizens, the undersigned suggest that the government is placed in even a more absurd view as to its helplessness in assuring protection by the punishment of offenders against its own laws. In proof of this they ask attention to the following order issued by Major General Hurlbut, dated December 27, 1864:

["Special Order No. 349.]

"3. Upon the official report of the attorney general of the State of Louisiana that the ordinary courts of justice are insufficient to punish the offenders named by him, and in consideration that the State government and courts of Louisiana owe their present existence to military authority, it is ordered that Michael De Courcy, Benjamin Orr, E. McShane, Y. M. Robinson, A. G. Pierson, and B. Wadsworth, for perjury and other offences, be sent for trial before the military commission now in session in the city of New Orleans, and of which Brigadier General B. S. Roberts, United States volunteers, is president, and that the attorney general of the State of Louisiana be admitted to appear before said-commission as public prosecutor."

What a conclusive refutation of the allegation of the existence of a government capable to maintain itself, and to fulfil the conditions of its establishment, and how absolute the proofs as to the regard in which it is held by the military authorities! The attorney general of the State supplicates the major general to supplant the majesty of the law, and to erect a military commission to try offences properly cognizable by the ordinary criminal tribunals; and with cool complacency General Hurlbut accedes to the request, in consideration that the State government and courts owe their existence to military authority, and graciously permits the law officer to appear before the military commission to prosecute offences against the municipal code of Louisiana!

Surely it is mockery to designate such a government by the name of republic, or to dignify such a community with the title of a State.

Two points are pressed by General Banks with much earnestness as inducements to recognition:

1. The propriety of recognition as tending to develop loyal sentiments.

2. The danger that the inhabitants will invite French intervention.

With due respect, the undersigned fail to perceive the force of these suggestions.

Loyalty in Louisiana, in the main, consists of mere submission to the power having the present ascendancy. It is clearly and truly stated by General Banks that little reliance is to be placed on an oath of allegiance as a test of fidelity, and it is notorious that the major portion of those within the Union lines, and nearly all the delegates to the convention, took the oath of allegiance to "the Confederate States," and so long as their power was maintained in Louisiana, either voluntarily or compulsorily, demonstrated their faithfulness by obedience. Upon the occupation of New Orleans by the Union forces the same persons, with equal readiness, took the oath prescribed by the President's proclamation, and so long as we hold occupancy and control will remain faithful—but no longer. Should the rebel arms again prevail there, the great body will succumb and relapse into acquiescence in its supremacy.

The only effective mode is to suppress the rebellion in the State—to destroy the government at Shreveport—to take permanent occupancy of the country, and give such assurance of protection as will enable the people to rest secure in their demonstrations of fidelity. This is not to be done by the creation or recognition of improvised or impotent civil governments, but by the steady advance of the army, bringing the inhabitants under our permanent control.

When this shall have been done, the work of restoration and reorganization will be desirable and easy of attainment. Until it shall have been accomplished all schemes of reconstruction are futile, resulting only in the creation of quasi civil governments wholly subject to military authority, and incapable of furnishing protection or insuring respect.

The suggestion of French interference and apprehension for the safety of New Orleans savors of the argument ad captandum.

The undersigned will be permitted to observe that France is affected by no consideration of the presence or absence of civil government in Louisiana. Without underrating the importance of the city of New Orleans or the navigation of the Mississippi, they suggest that their safety is better insured by naval armaments, well appointed fortifications, and the bayonets of our gallant soldiers, than by the unsubstantial sovereignty vested in Governor Mahan. Foreign intervention has been prevented, not by considerations of national morality or the arts of diplomacy, but by the manifestation of the power and energy of the people of the United States, by her stupendous resources, by her wonderful invention in the perfection of the engineery of war, and by the prowess of her army and navy, rendering doubtful, if not desperate, the issue of any conflict on land or sea.

These are the instrumentalities upon which we must rely, not only for the safety of New Orleans but for the final suppression of the rebellion, until which time the question should be, not how soon States shall be reorganized and members be admitted on this floor, but how they shall be restrained from setting up governments without a people and proposing representatives without constituencies, to the danger of feeble legislation and the detriment of the republic.

In view of the facts elicited by the investigation of the matter committed to them, the undersigned submit the following resolution, dissenting from the vote of the majority of the committee:

Resolved, That M. F. Bonzano, claiming to be a representative from the first congressional district of Louisiana, is not entitled to a seat in this House as a member thereof.

N. B. SMITHERS,
CHAS. UPSON.

February 17—An affirmative report was presented in the cases of A. P. Field and W. D. Mann, claiming seats from the second and third congressional districts in Louisiana, based upon the reasoning and facts stated in the preceding report.

No votes were taken.

THE ARKANSAS QUESTION.

IN SENATE.

1865, January 27—Mr POMEROY introduced this joint resolution, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

FOR THE RETURN OF ARKANSAS TO THE UNION.

Whereas the President of the United States, by a proclamation bearing date the sixteenth day of August, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-one, and, among other things, declare that the inhabitants of the State of Arkansas were in a condition of insurrection against the United States, and that all commercial intercourse between the said State, and the inhabitants thereof, and the citizens of other States, and other parts of the United States, was and would remain unlawful, until such insurrection should cease or be suppressed; and whereas, by their own act, the citizens of a portion of the said State met in convention, at Fort Smith, on the thirtieth day of October, anno Domini eighteen hundred and sixty-three, and passed resolutions recommending the choosing of delegates to a State convention; the vigorous prosecution of the war, as long as rebels in arms against the government of the United States could be found, and the abolition of the institution of slavery, and announcing further the determination to support the administration in its efforts to suppress the existing rebellion; and which movement was heartily seconded by thousands of the loyal citizens of the State, who, without knowledge that an amnesty proclamation was about to be promulgated, were earnestly desirous of being recognized again by the general government; and whereas, under the President's proclamation of December eight, eighteen hundred and sixty-three, and his instructions to Major General Steele, then commanding the department of Arkansas, bearing date January twenty, eighteen hundred and sixty-four, a State government was duly, and without military restraint, organized on the fourteenth, fifteenth, and sixteenth days of March, anno Domini eighteen hundred and sixty-four, and a constitution republican in form and forever prohibiting slavery and involuntary servitude, except for the punishment of crime, was ratified by a vote of twelve thousand two hundred and twenty-six for, to one hundred and seventy-seven against it; and whereas the progress of our arms has been such in Arkansas as to justify the re-establishment of a State government therein, and the evidences of the loyalty of the people of this State, evinced by their united and cordial support and adherence to this constitution and the laws made under it, and by furnishing over six full regiments and a battery for the cause of the Union in this national conflict are sufficient to entitle their claim for the recognition of their present State government to the favorable action of Congress: Therefore,

Be it resolved, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and requested to issue his proclamation declaring the inhabitants of Arkansas no longer in a state of insurrection against the United States, and relieving them from the restriction upon their commercial intercourse with the "citizens of other States, and other parts of the United States," created by the said proclamation.

Sec. 2. That the senators and members of the House of Representatives from the said State elected under and by virtue of the new constitution thereof, to represent the said State in the Congress of the United States be permitted to take their seats upon presentation of the usual and proper credentials.

IN HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

1865, February 17—Mr. DAWES, from the Committee on Elections, made this report:

The Committee of Elections, to whom were referred the credentials of T. M. Jacks and J. M. Johnson, claiming seats in this House as representatives from the first and third congressional districts of Arkansas, submit the following report:

There seems in Arkansas at all times to have been a large number of unconditional Union men. It is evident that the so-called secession ordinance was not passed in accordance with the wishes of the people of the State. The convention elected in 1861 was largely Union, but, without instructions from the people, passed the ordinance of secession.

After three years of war and desolation, the loyal people of Arkansas assembled in convention at Little Rock in January, 1864. The result of the convention's deliberations was the amending of the State constitution, the appointment of a provisional governor, lieutenant governor, and secretary of state, and the designation of the 14th, 15th, and 16th days of March as the time for holding a general election throughout the State.

The acts of this convention, judging from the statements of its members, were rather suggestive than obligatory. Indeed it did not claim its acts as binding until they were ratified by the people, which was done with a unanimity seldom met with. At the election on the 14th, 15th, and 16th of March the acts of the convention were approved by 12,177 voters, while they were disapproved by only 226. At that election the people of more than forty counties elected State and county officers necessary to set to work again the machinery of a loyal State government which had been overthrown by the rebellion in the month of May, 1861.

On the 18th of April, 1864, the State government was formally inaugurated, since which time it has been struggling for an existence under difficulties which those who are strangers to its trials cannot properly appreciate.

The amended constitution differs from the constitution of the State before the rebellion in but a few important particulars.

1st. It forever prohibits slavery or involuntary servitude which it does in the following words, viz:

[Extract from the present Constitution of the State of Arkansas.]

ARTICLE V.

Abolishment of Slavery.

Sec. 1. "Neither slavery nor involuntary servitude shall hereafter exist in this State, otherwise than for the punishment of crime, whereof the party shall have been convicted by due process of law; nor shall any male person arrived at the age of twenty-one years, nor female arrived at the age of eighteen years, be held to serve any person as a servant, under any indenture or contract hereafter made, unless such person shall enter into such indenture or contract while in a state of perfect freedom, and on condition of a bona fide consideration received, or to be received" for their services.

"Nor shall any indenture of any negro or mulatto hereafter made and executed out of this State, or, if made in this State, when the term of service exceeds one year, be of the least validity, except those given in case of apprenticeship, which shall not be for a longer term than until the apprentice shall arrive at the age of twenty-one years, if a male, or the age of eighteen years, if a female."

It also provides for the office of lieutenant governor, an office not known to the old State constitution.

The supreme judges of the State are, under the amended constitution elected by the people; under the old they were chosen by the legislature. There are some other trifling differences relating to the trial for cases of assault and battery, the amount of claims that may be tried before a justice's court, &c.

The preamble to the Constitution repudiates emphatically the rebel debt of the State, and declares null and void all acts of rebel magistrates done under the authority of the rebellion, save the solemnization of matrimony, the act of conveying, and others of similar nature provided for under like circumstances under the common law. The convention also provided that all laws and parts of laws in force in the State prior to the sixth day of May, A. D. 1861, and not inconsistent with the amended constitution, should be in full force and effect as before the rebellion.

The governor elect was duly and formally inaugurated on the 18th April. The legislature, composed of senators and representatives from more than forty of fifty-five counties in the State, met at the State capitol, on the 11th of April, and each house organized with a quorum present during the first week of the session.

The legislature remained in session to the 1st of June, when they adjourned until the first Monday in November, at which time they again met, and continued in session to the 1st of January of the present year, when they again adjourned until the 1st January, A. D. 1866.

During the session of April and May, 1861, the legislature elected two United States senators, to fill the unexpired terms of Wm. K. Sebastian and Dr. Mitchell, senators from that State previous to the commencement of the rebellion.

During the said session of the legislature they passed an act defining the qualification of voters, which shows most clearly that they entertain no sympathy or fellowship with the rebellion. The sixth section of that act is in the following words:

"And be it further enacted by the general assembly of the State of Arkansas, That each voter shall, before depositing his vote at any election in this State, take an oath that he will support the Constitution of the United States and of this State, and that he has not voluntarily borne arms against the United States, or this State, nor aided, directly or indirectly, the so-called confederate authorities, since the eighteenth day of April, A. D. 1864, (the day the governor was inaugurated,) said oath to be administered by one of the judges of the election; and this act shall take effect from and after its passage."

This act shows a commendable prudence on the part of the legislature to guard the ballot-box against the disloyal part of the people. While the constitution makes no provision against returned rebels who were once citizens of the State, this prompt legislation shows that the people are determined to guard themselves in the future against those who have well nigh ruined their State in the past.

Arkansas has given another proof of her loyalty and devotion to the United States, which should not be overlooked. From evidence which your committee have no disposition to discredit, it appears that Arkansas has furnished at least ten thousand volunteer soldiers for the United States armies. These men are to-day either filling a soldier's grave, or the ranks of their country's armies.

At the election in March, 1864, the people of the 1st congressional district elected T. M. Jacks as their representative in Congress, by a vote of about three thousand. The 2d district elected A. A. C. Rogers by a large majority over his competitor. The 3d district, J. M. Johnson, by a very large majority.

The first district is composed of the following named counties: Arkansas, Conway, Crittenden, Craighead, Fulton, Greene, Independence, Izard, Jackson, Lawrence, Mississippi, Monroe, Phillips, Poinsett, Prairie, Randolph, St. Francis, Searcy, Van Buren, and White. These counties by their returns show that in the Presidential election in 1860 they cast 16,841 votes. Fourteen of these counties, viz: Arkansas, Conway, Crittenden, Fulton, Independence, Izard, Jackson, Lawrence, Monroe, Phillips, Prairie, Randolph, and Van Buren, which participated pretty fully in the election of March, cast the aggregate vote of 3,000. These counties in 1860 gave 14,005 votes—the six counties not voting, or voting to only a very limited extent, in the election of March, to wit: Craighead, Greene, Mississippi, Poinsett, Searcy, and St. Francis gave in 1860 2,836 votes; these, under the ratio of the vote cast in the eleven counties that did vote, should have given about 557 votes at the March election. Of the 3,009 votes cast in this district for member of Congress, T. M. Jacks received all but fifteen.

In the second district, composed of the counties of Ashley, Bradley, Calloway, Chicot, Clark, Columbia, Dallas, Desha, Drew, Hempstead, Hot Springs, Jefferson, Lafayette, Ouachita, Pulaski, Saline, and Union, your committee have not been able to satisfy themselves as to the vote cast; the evidence going to show that in this district the vote was respectable as compared to the whole vote of the State—that some four or five counties did not vote in the election, and that the vote of the counties of Jefferson and Pulaski was relatively large.

In the third district, composed of the counties of Benton, Carroll, Crawford, Franklin, Johnson, Madison, Marion, Montgomery, Newton, Perry, Pike, Polk, Pope, Scott, Clark, Sebastian, Sevier, Washington, and Yell, the vote in March was a tolerably full one, all except the county of Perry participating in the election.

In this district the vote for representative in Congress was nearly five thousand, of which vote J. M. Johnson received over four thousand. These counties in 1860 gave an aggregate vote of 16,932.

The position taken by the committee in the case of Mr. Bonzano, of Louisiana, will apply with equal force to these cases from Arkansas. In the report in that case the committee say:

"This election depends for its validity upon the effect which the House is disposed to give to the efforts to reorganize a State government in Louisiana, which have here been briefly recited. The districting of the State for representatives, and the fixing of the time for holding the election, were the act of the convention. Indeed, the election of governor and other State officers, as well as the existence of the convention itself, as well as its acts, are all parts of the same movements.

"It is objected to their validity, that they neither originated in nor followed any pre-existing law of the State or nation. But the answer to this objection lies in the fact that, in the nature of the case, neither a law of the State nor action to meet the case was a possibility. The State was attempting to rise out of the ruin caused by an armed overthrow of its laws. They had been trampled in the dust; and there existed no body in the State to make an enabling act. Congress cannot pass an enabling act for a State. It is neither one of the powers granted by the several States to the general government, nor necessary to the carrying out of any of those powers; and all the powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or the people. It is preposterous to have expected at the hands of the rebel authorities in Louisiana that, previous to the overthrow of the State government, they should prepare a legal form of proceeding for its restoration. In the absence of any such legal form prepared beforehand in the State, and like absence of power on the part of the general government, under the delegated powers of the Constitution, it follows, that the power to restore a lost State government in Louisiana existed nowhere, or in the people, the original source of all political power in this country. The people, in the exercise of that power, cannot be required to conform to any particular mode, for that presupposes a power to prescribe outside of themselves, which it has been seen does not exist. The result must be republican; for the people and the States have surrendered to the United States, to that extent, the power over their form of government in this, that the United States shall guarantee to every State a republican form of government."

"It follows, therefore, that if this work of reorganizing and re-establishing a State government was the work of the people, it was the legitimate exercise of an inalienable and inherent right, and, if republican in form, is entitled not only to recognition, but to the 'guaranty' of the Constitution."

The committee recommend to the House for its adoption the subjoined resolutions:

Resolved, That T. M. Jacks is entitled to a seat in this House as a representative from the first congressional district in Arkansas.

Resolved, That J. M. Johnson is entitled to a seat in this House as a representative from the third congressional district in Arkansas.

No vote was reached upon the question.

SENATORS FROM INSURRECTIONARY STATES.

SENATOR FROM VIRGINIA.

1865, February 17—Mr. WILLEY offered the credentials of Joseph Segar, Senator elect from the State of Virginia, to supply the vacancy occasioned by the death of Lemuel J. Bowen.

Mr. SUMNER moved their reference to the Committee on the Judiciary. Mr. SHERMAN moved that the credentials do lie upon the table, which was agreed to—yeas 29, nays 13:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Buckalew, Chandler, Clark, Collamer, Conness, Cowan, Davis, Doolittle, Farwell, Foster, Hale, Harlan, Howard, Howe, Morgan, Morrill, Nye, Powell, Ramsey, Sherman, Sprague, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, Wade, Wilkinson, Wilson—29.

NAYS—Messrs. Dixon, Hendricks, Johnson, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Nesmith, Pomeroy, Richards, Saulsbury, Van Winkle, Willey, Wright—13.

Subsequently—at the special session—they were withdrawn, re-presented, and postponed until the next session.

SENATOR FROM LOUISIANA.

March 2—Mr. DOOLITTLE offered the credentials of Michael Hahn as a Senator from Louisiana for six years. Mr. DAVIS objected to the reception of the paper. On motion of Mr. TRUMBULL, the motion of Mr. DOOLITTLE to receive it was laid on the table. Subsequently—at the special session—they were withdrawn, re-presented, and postponed until the next December.

IN SENATE—SPECIAL SESSION.

SENATOR FROM ARKANSAS.

1865, March 7—Mr. LANE, of Kansas, offered the credentials of William D. Snow, as Senator from Arkansas, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

March 9—Mr. TRUMBULL made this report, which was agreed to:

In the year 1861 the constituted authorities of the State of Arkansas undertook to withdraw that State from the Union, and so far succeeded in the attempt as by force of arms to expel from the State for a time the authorities of the United States, and set up a government in hostility hereto; and in pursuance of an act of Congress, the inhabitants of said State have since been declared to be in a state of insurrection against the United States. The committee, therefore, recommend that the question of the admission of Mr. Snow to a seat be postponed till the next session of Congress, and until Congress shall take action in regard to the recognition of the alleged existing State government in Arkansas.

SENATOR FROM VIRGINIA.

March 9—Mr. DOOLITTLE offered the credentials of John C. Underwood, as Senator from Virginia for six years; which were postponed until the next session.

PREREQUISITES FOR REPRESENTATION IN THE SENATE.

March 8—Mr. SUMNER proposed to offer and have this resolution referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, but objection was made:

Resolved, That where a State has been declared to be in insurrection, no person can be recognized as Senator from such State, or as claimant of a seat as Senator from such State, until after the occurrence of three several conditions: first, the cessation of all armed hostility to the United States within the limits of such State; secondly, the adoption by such State of a constitution of government, republican in form, and not repugnant to the Constitution and laws of the United States; and thirdly, an act of Congress declaring that the people of such State are entitled to representation in the Congress of the United States.

THE SECESSION OF LOUISIANA.

I have recently obtained the journal of the Convention of Louisiana which passed the Ordinance of Secession, and, in view of the interest attaching to these proceedings, subjoin these facts:

1861, January 23—Convention met at Baton Rouge, and provided for the appointment of this Committee of Fifteen "to prepare and report as soon as possible an ordinance providing for the withdrawal of the State of Louisiana from the present Federal Union:" J. Perkins, jr., of Madison, A. Declouet, A. B. Roman, Edward Sparrow, I. Garrett, T. J. Semmes, L. J. Dupre, A. Provosty, W. R. Miles, J. L. Lewis, A. Talbot, W. R. Barrow, J. K. Elgee, C. Roselius, G. M. Williamson.

January 24—Mr. Perkins reported a Secession Ordinance, and a resolution relative to the navigation of the Mississippi river. Mr. Rozier and Mr. Fuqua presented each a substitute for the report. The action of Governor Moore in seizing the forts, arsenals, and munitions of war within the State was approved—yeas 119, nays 5, (Cicero C. Meredith, David Pierson, Joseph A. Rozier, W. T. Stocker, James G. Taliaferro.)

January 25—J. L. Manning, Commissioner from South Carolina, and J. A. Winston, from Alabama, received and heard; and January 30, W. J. Vason, from Georgia, and February 12, John Robertson, from Virginia. An address was received from U. S. Senators Slidell and Benjamin, and Representatives Landrum and Davidson. January 31—George Williamson appointed Commissioner to Texas.

VOTES ON ORDINANCE.

January 25—The question was first taken on Mr. Rozier's substitute, which proposed a Convention of the slaveholding States at Nashville, February 25th next, to determine what amendments of the Constitution are necessary and proper, in case of the failure of the prompt adoption of which said Convention to be re-assembled and forthwith organize a separate Confederacy of slaveholding States. The vote was yeas 24, nays 106. The YEAS were:

Messrs. Bermudez, Bienvenu, Clark, Cook, Connelly, Conner of St. Tammany, Cottman, Davidson of Sabine, Duffel, Garrett, Gill, Hough, Lewis of Orleans, Meredith, McCollom, Patterson, Pierson of Winn, Roselius, Rozier, Smart, Stocker, Taliaferro, Verret, Williams—24.

The question was next taken on Mr. Fuqua's substitute, declaring that Louisiana cannot and will not submit to the administration of Lincoln and Hamlin upon the "principles that the Constitution does not recognize property in slaves, that the Government should prevent the extension of slavery into the common territory, and that all the powers of the Government should be so exercised as in time to abolish this institution wherever it exists;" announcing that any attempt to coerce any seceding State will absolve Louisiana from all allegiance to the Federal Government, and that Louisiana in that event would make common cause with the State attacked; and declaring for a Convention of slaveholding States at Montgomery, Alabama, February 4, 1861, as requested by that State, for the formation by said Convention of a Federal Union of the slaveholding States, and the freedom of the navigation of the Mississippi and its tributaries; and for an adjournment until February 28, 1861, to hear the report of the action of the Montgomery Convention. Which was lost—yeas 47, nays 73. The YEAS were:

Messrs. Bernudez, Bienvenu, Bush, Clark, Cook, Connelly, Conner of St. Tammany, Cottman, Davidson of Sabine, Duffel, Fuqua, Gardere, Garrett, Gaudet, Herron, Hough, Hollinsworth, Lagrone, LeBlanc, LeBourgeois, Lewis of Claiborne, Lewis of Orleans, Martin of Assumption, Magee, Melancon, Meredith, McCollom, Patterson, Perkins of Lafourche, Pierson of Winn, Pike, Polk, Pope, Pugh, Roman, Roselius, Rozier, Sompayrac, Scott of Claiborne, Scott of East Feliciana, Stocker, Thomasson, Tucker, Verret, Walker, Williams of East Baton Rouge, Williams of St. Helena—47.

The Ordinance of Secession, as reported from the committee, was then passed—yeas 113, nays 17, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. W. R. Adams, Wm. Dumont Anderson, Bernard Avego, A. Barbin, Wm. Ruffin Barrow, E. Bernudez, P. E. Bonford, A. Bonner, C. C. Briscoe, Walthall Barton, Louis Bush, E. G. W. Butler, Thos. J. Caldwell, Fenelec Cannon, Wm. C. Carr, George Clark, Thomas A. Cooke, G. F. Connelly, Lemuel P. Conner, Sidney S. Conner, Wm. Alex. Davidson, E. C. Davidson, Alex. Deconlet, Alcibiade DeBlanc, Samuel W. Dorsey, Ed. Duffel, Lucius J. Dupre, J. B. Elam, J. K. Elgee, Ro. W. Estlin, G. L. Fuselier, James O. Fuqua, A. H. Gladden, Y. W. Graves, A. M. Gray, Wm. E. Gill, M. E. Girard, Sid. H. Griffin, J. Hernandez, Andrew S. Herron, B. L. Hodge, Robert Hodges, S. Hollinsworth, Theodore Johnson, Thomas H. Kennedy, Wilson M. Kidd, Felix Labatut, E. Lawrence, Chas. T. Lagrone, Chas. O. LeBlanc, Felix Lewis, John L. Lewis, Th. C. Manning, Henry Marshall, Antoine Marrero, Leon D. Marks, J. N. Marks, Robt. Campbell Martin, John H. Martin, Nehemiah Magee, W. R. Miles, J. J. Michel, Jo. E. Miller, John Moore, Jas. McCloskey, Andrew McCollom, Henderson McFarland, Jr., Sam'l Washington McKneely, A. Mouton, M. O. H. Norton, Jules G. Olivier, D. O'Bryan, Wm. Patterson, J. Scudday Perkins, John Perkins, Jr., W. M. Perkins, Wm. R. Peck, John Pemberton, Aaron H. Pierson, Wm. S. Pike, H. M. Polk, N. W. Pope, Ang. Provosty, Walter Pugh, Hardy Richardson, J. B. Slawson, W. W. Smart, C. L. Swayze, Thos. J. Semmes, Chas. D. Stewart, Edward Sparrow, J. Sompayrac, Nelson J. Scott, Tho. W. Scott, Washington M. Smith, Benjamin S. Tappan, Augustus Talbot, R. Taylor, of St. Charles, J. A. Taylor, of St. Landry, Louis Texola, J. M. Thomasson, Robert E. Todd, John T. Towles, Caleb J. Tucker, Mark Valentine, W. B. Warren, Alexander Walker, J. A. Williams, James A. Williams, George Williamson, Joseph Biddle Wilkinson, P. S. Wiltz, Zebulon York—113.

NAYS—Messrs. Charles Bienvenu, Thomas E. H. Cottman, Fergus Gardere, Isaiah Garrett, J. K. Gaudet, Wade H. Hough, Louis S. LeBourgeois, George W. Lewis, E. O. Melancon, Cicero C. Meredith, David Pierson, A. B. Roman, Christian Roselius, Joseph A. Rozier, W. T. Stocker, James G. Taliaferro, A. Verret—17.

Upon the announcement of this vote, the President declared the connection between the State of Louisiana and the Federal Union dissolved; the flag of the State was placed on the platform; prayer was pronounced by Rev. W. E. N. Lingfield, and the flag blessed, according to the rites and forms of the Roman Catholic Church, by Father Hubert.

The accompanying resolution recognizing the right of the free navigation of the Mississippi river and its tributaries by all friendly States bordering thereon, the right of egress and ingress of the mouths of the Mississippi by all friendly States and Powers, and declaring "our willingness to enter into any stipulations to guarantee the exercise of said rights," was unanimously adopted.

The ordinance was then signed by 121 members, being all of those who voted above, except Messrs. Garrett, Hough, George W. Lewis, Meredith, D. Pierson, Roselius, Rozier, Stocker, and Taliaferro.

ON SUBMITTING THE ORDINANCE AND CONSTITUTION TO POPULAR VOTE.

Pending the final vote above taken,

A resolution of Mr. Bienvenu that, whatever be the action of the Convention on Secession, it shall have no effect until the same shall have been ratified by a vote of the majority of the people at the ballot-box, on the 25th of February, 1861, was disagreed to—yeas 45, nays 84. The affirmative vote was the same as on Mr. Fuqua's substitute, except that Messrs. Cook, Hollinsworth, Pope, and Walker, then in the affirmative, were now in the negative, and Mr. A. H. Pierson, then not voting, was now in the affirmative, and Mr. Taliaferro, then in the negative, was now in the affirmative.

March 16—Mr. Bienvenu offered an ordinance requesting the President of the Convention to lay before it the official returns at the election for the delegates; but a motion to suspend the rules for the purpose was lost—yeas 23, nays 73.

An ordinance offered by Mr. Cannon, to submit the permanent constitution of the Confederate States adopted by the Confederate Congress, March 11, to the qualified voters of the State for their ratification or rejection, on the 6th of May, was rejected—yeas 26, nays 74. The YEAS were:

Messrs. Bienvenu, Bush, Cannon, Clark, Connelly, Cottman, Davidson of Sabine, Duffel, Fuqua, Herron, Hough, Johnson, Lagrone, Lewis of Claiborne, Lewis of Orleans, McCollom, Melancon, Meredith, Pike, Roselius, Rozier, Scott of East Feliciana, Sompayrac, Stocker, Taliaferro, Thomasson, Tucker—26.

March 21—An ordinance offered by Mr. Rozier, to provide for the election of a convention "to adopt or reject the Confederate Constitution," was laid on the table—yeas 94, nays 10. (Messrs. Bienvenu, Connelly, Duffel, Garrett, Lewis of Orleans, Meredith, Roselius, Rozier, Stocker, Taliaferro.)

The constitution was then ratified, and declared binding upon the people of the State of Louisiana—yeas 101, nays 7. (Messrs. Bienvenu, Garrett, Lewis of Orleans, Roselius, Rozier, Stocker, Taliaferro.)

RIGHT OF SECEDING FROM THE CONFEDERACY.

Mr. Rozier offered an amendment to the ratifying ordinance, declaring that in adopting the constitution, the State "expressly reserves to herself the right, peaceably to withdraw from the Union created by that constitution, whenever, in the judgment of her citizens, her paramount interest may require it;" which was laid on the table—yeas 92, nays 11. (Messrs. Bienvenu, Connelly, Duffel, Garrett, Lewis of Orleans, Martin of Assumption, Melancon, Roselius, Rozier, Stocker, Taliaferro.)

PUBLIC PROPERTY SEIZED.

February 5, 1861—A committee reported that "this public property was in the hands of the officers of the late Federal Government, within the parish of Orleans, February 1, 1861:"

In Sub-Treasurer's vault at the Mint, in gold and silver coin.....	$483,983 98
In Treasury of the Mint, in gold, silver, and copper.....	101,745 81
In Tr. M. F. Bonzano's possession, melter and refiner.....	143,689 85
In B. F. Taylor's possession, coiner.....	172,875 86

Of this sum $902,295 50

$389,267 46 belong to "permanent bullion fund."
219,926 68 belong to "individual depositors."
4,051 38 "accumulated profit on coinage."

$643,245 52

The amount of "import duties assessed on merchandise in warehouse, entered for warehousing to 31st January, 1861," was reported, February 11, by Collector F. H. Hatch, at $734,336.

March 7—An ordinance passed transferring the "Bullion fund" ($389,267 46) to the "Government of the Confederate States of America," and the sum of $147,519 66, being the balance received by the State depository from the customs since January 31st. This ordinance passed without a division, several amendments intended to reduce the amount transferred having failed by decided votes.

OFFICERS OF THE CONVENTION.

The officers of the convention were: J. Thomas Wheat, Secretary; E. E. Kidd, Assistant Secretary; J. O. Nixon, of the New Orleans Crescent, Printer; A. M. Perrault, Sergeant-at-Arms; J. R. T. Hyams, Warrant Clerk; Emile Wilz and Albert Fabrè, Translating Clerks; William Simmons, Doorkeeper; James Kirby, Page.

Constitutional Amendment for the Extinction of Slavery, and Kindred Subjects.

THE ANTI-SLAVERY AMENDMENT.

1865, January 6—Mr. ASHLEY called up the motion to reconsider the vote taken June 15, 1864, (see page 258,) when the whole subject was discussed.

January 31—Mr. STILES moved to lay on the table the motion to reconsider, which was not agreed to—yeas 57, nays 111, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. James C. Allen, William J. Allen, Ancona, Bliss, Brooks, James S. Brown, Chandler, Clay, Cox, Cravens, Dawson, Denison, Eden, Edgerton, Eldridge, Finck, Ganson, Grider, Hall, Harding, Harrington, Benjamin G. Harris, Charles M. THE PRESIDENT'S APPROVAL.

The joint resolution was approved by the *1865, February 4—The delegates from certain Territories obtained permission to enter this paper upon the Journal of the House:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WASHINGTON, February 1, 1865.

Representing Territories which must soon become States, as Delegates deprived of the inestimable privilege of voting in this House, and feeling a deep interest in the proposition to amend the Federal Constitution forever prohibiting slavery within the jurisdiction of the United States, demanded alike by the exigencies of the times, the voice of the loyal people, and by our efforts in the field to suppress a rebellion inaugurated and sustained for the purpose of perpetuating slavery, we cannot do less than state that the measure meets our unequalled approbation.

† ABSENT—Messrs. Lazar, Le Blond, Marcy, McDowell, McKinney, Middleton, Rogers, Voorhees—8.

PRESIDENT February 1, respecting which, the Senate, February 7, passed this resolution :

Resolved, That the article of amendment proposed by Congress to be added to the Constitution of the United States respecting the extinction of slavery therein, having been inadvertently presented to the President for his approval, it is hereby declared that such approval was unnecessary to give effect to the action of Congress in proposing said amendment, inconsistent with the former practice in reference to all amendments to the Constitution heretofore adopted,* and being inadvertently done, should not constitute a precedent for the future; and the Secretary is hereby instructed not to communicate the notice of the approval of said proposed amendment by the President to the House of Representatives.

A concurrent resolution was passed, requiring the PRESIDENT to transmit to the Executives of the several States the above amendment.

THE RULE OF RATIFICATION.

IN SENATE.

1865, February 4—MR. SUMNER submitted the following resolutions, which were ordered to be printed :

Concurrent resolutions declaring the rule in ascertaining the three-fourths of the several States required in the ratification of a constitutional amendment.

Whereas Congress, by a vote of two-thirds of both houses, has proposed an amendment to the Constitution prohibiting slavery throughout the United States, which, according to the existing requirement of the Constitution, will be valid to all intents and purposes as part of the Constitution, when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States; and whereas, in the present condition of the country, with certain States in arms against the national government, it becomes necessary to determine what number of States constitutes the three-fourths required by the Constitution; therefore,

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That the rule followed in ascertaining the two-thirds of both houses proposing the amendment to the Constitution should be followed in ascertaining the three-fourths of the several States ratifying the amendment; that, as in the first case, the two-thirds are founded on the simple fact of representation in the two houses, so in the second case, the three-fourths must be founded on the simple fact of representation in the government of the country, and the support thereof, and that any other rule establishes one basis for the proposition of the amendment and another for its ratification, placing one on a simple fact and the other on a claim of right, while it also recognizes the power of rebels in arms to interpose a veto upon the national government in one of its highest functions.

Resolved, That all acts, executive and legislative, in pursuance of the Constitution, and all treaties made under the authority of the United States, are valid to all intents and purposes throughout the United States, although certain rebel States fail to participate therein; and that the same rule is equally applicable to an amendment of the Constitution.

Resolved, That the amendment of the Constitution, prohibiting slavery throughout the United States, will be valid, to all intents and purposes, as part of the Constitution whenever ratified by three-fourths of the States de facto exercising the powers and prerogatives of the United States under the Constitution thereof.

Resolved, That any other rule, requiring the participation of the rebel States, while illogical and unreasonable, is dangerous in its consequences, inasmuch as all recent Presidential proclamations, including that of emancipation, also, all recent acts of Congress, including those creating the national debt and establishing a national currency; and also all recent treaties, including the treaty with Great Britain for the extinction of the slave trade, have been made, enacted, or ratified respectively without any participation of the rebel States.

Resolved, That any other rule must tend to postpone the great day when the prohibition of slavery will be valid to all intents and purposes as part of the Constitution of the United States; but the rule herewith declared will assure the immediate ratification of the prohibition and the consummation of the national desires.

*The amendment proposed by the 36th Congress was approved by President Buchanan, March 2, 1861. See Statutes at large, vol. 12, p. 251.

PROPOSED COMPENSATION TO LOYAL SLAVE OWNERS.

IN HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

1865, February 6—MR. ROLLINS, of Missouri, introduced the following joint resolution, which was laid over :

Whereas the Senate and House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States having passed, on the 31st day of January, 1865, a joint resolution to submit to the Legislatures of the several States an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which joint resolution is as follows :

"Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the following article be proposed to the Legislatures of the several States as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which, when ratified by three-fourths of said Legislatures, shall be valid, to all intents and purposes, as a part of the said Constitution, namely :

"ART. XIII. SEC. 1. Neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime, whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall exist within the United States, or any place subject to their jurisdiction.

"SEC. 2 Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation."

And whereas by the ratification of this amendment by three-fourths of the several States all persons heretofore held as slaves under the laws of certain States of the Union will be made free; and in consequence thereof a large number of citizens, (among them many widows and orphans,) their former owners, who are, have always been, or may be willing to again become faithful to the Government of the United States, and who have not been in the civil or military service of the so-called Confederate States, will be subjected to heavy pecuniary losses; and whereas this being a measure necessary to "form a more perfect Union, establish justice" to all men, "insure domestic tranquility," "promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves" and future generations, in the attainment of which great objects the people of all the States have a common interest and for their establishment should make mutual sacrifices ;

Be it therefore resolved, &c., That all persons faithful to the Constitution and obedient to the laws of the United States, residents of any State that shall ratify the amendment to the Constitution of the United States proposed to the Legislatures of the several States by the Congress of the United States on the 31st day of January, 1865, who have not been in the civil or military service of the so-called Confederate States, and who have been deprived of the services of these slaves, heretofore recognized by law as property by said amendment, or by any act or ordinance of emancipation of any State of the United States, shall receive therefor a just and reasonable compensation; said compensation to be provided for by the United States Government without unreasonable delay.

OTHER PROPOSITIONS FOR AMENDMENT.

APPORTIONMENT OF REPRESENTATION.*

IN SENATE.

1865, February 5—MR. SUMNER offered the

* Letter of Prof. Francis Lieber, LL. D., Columbia College, New York, to Senator Morgan :

SIR: As the election, on the 8th of November last, has added one of the highest national acts to the history of our kind, so the amendment of the Constitution which yesterday passed the House of Representatives, will be the greatest effect of the present revolt, if, as we all hope, three-fourths of the State Legislatures shall give their assent.

The same year, 1788, saw the framing of our Constitution and the first cultivation of the cotton-plant in Georgia; and in course of time this textile plant gave renewed vitality and expansion to slavery, fostering in our great polity, until the gangrene broke out in the deep woe of a wide and bitter civil war. The year 1865 will cure our system of this poisonous malady. Seventy-seven years is a long period; the reckless rebellion has brought grief to all and anguish to many hearts, but if the effect of the fevered period be the throwing off of the malignant virus, the Nation will stand purified, and the dire inconsistency which has existed so long between our Bill of Rights of the Fourth of July and our fostering protection of extending bondage, will at last pass away. The sacrifices which we have made will not have been too great.

The amendment which is now offered to the American people runs thus :

"Neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except as a following, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary :

Resolved, (two-thirds of both Houses concurring,) That punishment for crime, whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall exist within the United States, or any place subject to their jurisdiction."

These are simple and straightforward words, allowing of no equivocation, yet, considered in connection with some passages of the Constitution, they require some remarks, which I address to you, Sir, as one of the United States Senators from New York, and as my neighbor in this city.

The amendment extinguishes slavery in the whole dominion of the United States. The Constitution as it now stands, (Article 1, section 2, paragraph 3,) however, directs that representatives "shall be apportioned among the several States, which may be included within the Union, according to their respective numbers, which shall be determined by adding to the whole number of free persons, including those bound to service for a term of years, and, excluding Indians not taxed, three-fifths of all other persons."

If, then, "all other persons"—that is, slaves—are declared free, and the foregoing provision of the Constitution is not amended, we simply add two-fifths to the basis of apportionment of Representatives in the Southern States; in other words, the number of Representatives in Congress from the States in which slavery has existed will be increased by the present amendment. As, however, these States, and especially those in which the colored citizens exceed in number the whites, will not give the common suffrage to the citizens of African extraction (as, indeed, many of the Northern States—for instance Pennsylvania—do not give it, and as other States give the right of voting to colored people on the condition of possessing freeholds only,) the result of the amendment as now proposed, without a supplementary amendment, would be an increased number of Southern Representatives in Congress of the same number of white citizens. In this case the Rebellion, though ultimately subdued at the cost of torrents of our blood and streams of our wealth, would be rewarded with an enlarged representation. No loyal citizen can wish for such a consummation. How is the difficulty to be avoided?

Let us first remember the following three points:

1. In the practice of every State of the Union those citizens vote for electors of the President of the United States who have a right to vote for Representatives in Congress. Immediately after the adoption of the Constitution of the United States, the Legislatures of several States elected the electors: but a more national spirit soon prevailed, and in all the different States of the Union the people elected the electors, except in South Carolina. There the Legislature retained the election of electors down to the breaking out of the rebellion, on the avowed ground that thus the State obtained a greater influence, this election of electors in South Carolina always taking place after the election by the people had been consummated in all the other States.

2. In every State those citizens who have a right to vote for the most numerous branch of the State Legislature, have also the right to vote for members of Congress.

3. In every State of the Union it is the State itself which determines by its own Constitution, who shall have the right to vote for members of the State Legislature.

These considerations, then, would lead to the suggestion, that the apportionment of members of Congress ought to be made according to the numbers of citizens who in each State have the right to vote for the State Legislature, or for its most numerous branch.

This suggestion may be expressed in an amendment additional to the one just passed, in such words as these:

"Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States which may be included within this Union, according to the respective numbers of male citizens of age having the qualifications requisite for electing members of the most numerous branch of the respective State Legislatures. The actual enumeration of said citizens shall be regularly made by the census of the United States, but a special census shall take place before the next new apportionment of representatives shall be made by the Congress of the United States."

You will observe that the words used in this proposition of an amendment have been taken, as far as it was feasible, from the Constitution itself. Article 1, section 2, paragraphs 1 and 3.

Believing, as I do, that this subject deserves the attention of the American people, I have not hesitated to make use of your permission to address to you this public letter, and have the honor to be, sir, your very obedient,

FRANCIS LIEBER.

NEW YORK, Feb. 1, 1865.

Hon. E. D. MORGAN, Senator of the United States, Washington, D. C.

the following article be proposed to the Legislatures of the several States as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which, when ratified by three-fourths of such Legislatures, shall become a part of the Constitution, to wit:

Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States which may be included within this Union, according to the number of male citizens of age having in each State the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State Legislature. The actual enumeration of such citizens shall be made by the census of the United States.

February 22—Mr. TRUMBULL, from the committee, reported adversely upon it.

IN HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

1864, December 7—Mr. SLOAN offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Judiciary Committee be instructed to inquire into the expediency of so amending section two of article one of the Constitution of the United States, that Representatives in Congress shall be apportioned among the several States which may be included within the Union, according to their respective numbers of qualified electors, and to report by bill or otherwise.

Which was adopted—yeas 60, nays 55, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Arnold, Bailey, John D. Baldwin, Baxter, Beaman, Blow, Boutwell, Boyd, Broomall, Ambrose W. Clark, Cobb, Cole, Donnelly, Driggs, Eckley, Eliot, Farnsworth, Garfield, Grinnell, Hooper, Asahel W. Steele, Stiles, Strouse, Stuart, Sweet, Townsend, Webster, Whaley, Fernando Wood—55.

1865, January 16—Mr. SLOAN introduced a bill to submit to the Legislatures of the several States this proposition:

ART. XIII. SEC. 1. Representatives in Congress shall be apportioned among the several States which may be included within this Union, according to their respective numbers of qualified electors. The actual enumeration shall be made in the year 1870, and within every subsequent term of ten years, in such manner as Congress shall by law direct.

SEC. 2. Direct taxes shall be apportioned among the several States according to the appraised value of taxable property therein respectively. The rule of appraisal and taxation shall be uniform.

Referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and not reported upon.

TO AUTHORIZE THE TAXING OF EXPORTS.

IN SENATE.

1865, January 23—Mr. DIXON offered this joint resolution:

Resolved, &c., (two-thirds of both Houses concurring.) That in lieu of the fifth paragraph of the ninth section of the first article of the Constitution of the United States, the following be proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which, when ratified by three-fourths of the legislatures of the several States, shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of the said Constitution, to wit:

The Congress shall have power to lay a tax or duty on articles exported from any State.

February 22—Mr. TRUMBULL, from the committee, reported adversely, deeming it injudicious and unadvisable at this time to propose that amendment to the Constitution.

IN HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

1864, December 5—Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland, offered the following, which was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means :

Resolved, That the Committee on Ways and Means be instructed to report a bill for the amendment of the Constitution, providing that so much of the ninth section of the first article of the Constitution as declares that "no tax or duty shall be laid on articles exported from any State" be, and the same is hereby, annulled.

The Committee made no report. (See page 259 for Mr. Blaine's proposition on same subject.)

TO RECOGNIZE THE CHRISTIAN RELIGION.

IN SENATE.

1865, February 22—Mr. TRUMBULL, from the Judiciary Committee, asked to be discharged from the further consideration of the memorial of the Presbytery of Cincinnati of September 20, 1864, and the petition of citizens for such an amendment to the Constitution as will more fully recognize the obligations of the Christian religion, and of the memorial of the Executive Committee of the Board of Delegates of the American Israelites protesting against said amendment.

TRANSFER OF A GUNBOAT TO LIBERIA.

IN SENATE.

1864, December 15—The Senate passed a bill to authorize the President to transfer a gunboat to the government of Liberia, (as recommended in his message,) by a vote of yeas 33, nays 9, as follows :

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Chandler, Clark, Collamer, Conness, Cowan, Dixon, Doolittle, Farwell, Foot, Foster, Grimes, Harlan, Harris, Henderson, Howard, Johnson, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, Morgan, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Sherman, Sprague, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wade, Wilkinson, Willey, Wilson—33.

The bill was not reached in the House.

TO REMOVE DISQUALIFICATION OF COLOR IN CARRYING THE MAELS.

IN SENATE.

1864, December 19—The following bill, (see p. 240)—

That from and after the passage of this act no person, by reason of color, shall be disqualified from employment in carrying the mails, and all acts and parts of acts establishing such disqualification, including especially the seventh section of the act of March 3, 1825, are hereby repealed—

Passed the Senate—

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Clark, Conness, Dixon, Doolittle, Farwell, Foot, Foster, Grimes, Harlan, Harris, Henderson, Howe, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, Morgan, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Sherman, Sprague, Sumner, Van Winkle, Wilkinson, Willey, Wilson—36.

NAYS—Messrs. Davis, Powell, Richardson, Riddle, Wright—5.

Mr. JOHNSON explained that he would have voted "aye" if present in time.

1865, March 3—The House considered the bill. Mr. EDEN moved that it be laid on the table, which was lost—yeas 30, nays 65, as follows :

YEAS—Messrs. Ancona, Bliss, James S. Brown, Chanler, Coffroth, Cox, Cravens, Elen, Elgerton, Eldridge, Finck, Knapp, Knox, Le Blond, Long, Marcy, Middleton, James R. It then passed without a division.

EXCLUSION OF COLORED PERSONS FROM THE CARS.

IN SENATE.

Pending the bill to incorporate the Baltimore and Washington Depot and Potomac Ferry Railway Company, 1865, January 17—Mr. SUMNER moved to add this proviso :

Provided, That no person shall be excluded from any car on account of color.

Which was agreed to—yeas 24, nays 6, as follows :

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Clark, Collamer, Conness, Dixon, Farwell, Foot, Foster, Harlan, Harris, Henderson, Hicks, Howard, Howe, Morgan, Morrill, Ramsey, Sherman, Sprague, Sumner, Van Winkle, Willey, Wilson—24.

NAYS—Messrs. Davis, Hendricks, Powell, Richardson, Riddle, Sautsbury—6.

This bill did not finally pass.

Pending the supplement to the charter of the Metropolitan Railroad Company in the District of Columbia, (the Senate being in Committee of the Whole,)

1865, February 4—Mr. SUMNER moved this new section :

That the provision prohibiting any exclusion from any car on account of color, already applicable to the Metropolitan railroad, is hereby extended to every other railroad in the District of Columbia.

Which was not agreed to—yeas 19, nays 20, as follows :

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Clark, Collamer, Farwell, Foot, Harlan, Harris, Henderson, Howard, Howe, Lane of Kansas, Morgan, Nye, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Stewart, Sumner, Wilson—19.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Conness, Cowan, Davis, Dixon, Doolittle, Hale, Hendricks, Johnson, Lane of Indiana, Morrill, Nesmith, Powell, Richardson, Sautsbury, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Willey, Wright—20.

Immediately after, Mr. SUMNER renewed it in open Senate.

February 6—It was agreed to—yeas 26, nays 10, as follows :

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Chandler, Collamer, Conness, Dixon,* Doolittle, Farwell, Foot, Foster, Grimes, Harris, Howard, Johnson, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, Morgan, Morrill, Nye, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Stewart, Sumner, Wade, Willey, Wilson—26.

NAYS—Messrs. Cowan, Davis, Henderson, Hendricks, Nesmith, Powell, Richardson, Sautsbury, Van Winkle, Wright—10.

IN HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

February 22—Mr. THOMAS T. DAVIS, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported the bill with sundry amendments, one of which was to strike out the above section and insert the following :

SEC. 5. That the provision prohibiting any exclusion

* Mr. Dixon made this explanation, February 6 :

I wish to say in regard to this amendment, that I opposed it on Saturday on the ground that it seemed to conflict with the rights of another company not now before the Senate ; but since that time I have seen the managers and controllers of that company, and find that they are unwilling to contend on this subject with what they considered to be the public opinion. They therefore make no objection to it ; and I shall make none.

from any car on account of color, already applicable to the Metropolitan railroad, is hereby repealed.

March 2—By unanimous consent all the amendments were withdrawn, and the Senate bill passed without a division.

PASSES FOR COLORED PERSONS LEAVING THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

IN HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

1865, March 3—Mr. SCHENCK, from the Military Committee, reported this resolution:

Resolved, That in the judgment of this House the order of the major general commanding the department of Washington and the twenty-second Army corps, issued on the 12th day of July, 1864, directing that no colored man should be allowed to leave Washington city going North, without a pass, is a regulation which makes an odious discrimination, in conflict with the law of the United States, which has declared free alike all citizens and residents of the District of Columbia; and that the President is hereby requested to direct said military order to be at once revoked.

Which was adopted, yeas 75, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Arnold, Ashley, Baily, John D. Baldwin, Baxter, Beaman, Bliss, Blow, Boutwell, Boyd, Broomall, Ambrose W. Clark, Cobb, Cole, Creswell, Henry Winter Davis, Thomas T. BUREAU OF FREEDMEN'S AFFAIRS.

The condition of this bill at the close of the first session of the Thirty-eighth Congress is stated on page 260.

1864, December 20—The House disagreed to the Senate amendments, and requested a committee of conference, to which the Senate assented. The committee consisted of Messrs. Eliot of Mass., Kelley of Penna., and Noble of Ohio, on the part of the House, and Messrs. Sumner of Mass., Howard of Michigan, and Buckalew of Penna., on the part of the Senate.

1865, February 2—The Committee reported a bill with these features:

A department of freedmen and abandoned lands is established, to be administered by a commissioner to be appointed by the President with the consent of the Senate, at an annual salary of $4,000, with prescribed subordinates. The commissioner is authorized to create districts, not to exceed two in each rebel State, when sufficiently brought under the military power of the United States, each to be under the supervision of an assistant commissioner, at an annual salary of $2,500, who is to appoint four local superintendents and clerks in each district at an annual salary of $1,500. The commissioner to have the general superintendence of all freedmen; to watch over the execution of all laws, proclamations, and military orders of emancipation, or in any way concerning freedmen; to establish necessary regulations to protect in their rights the freedmen, who are to be treated in all respects as free men, with all proper remedies in courts of justice, &c. The assistant commissioners are to take possession of all abandoned real estate belonging to disloyal persons, and all real estate to which the United States have title or of which the United States have possession, and not already appropriated to government uses, and all property found on and belonging to such estate, and to lease them to freedmen on such terms as may be agreed upon, or to others if not required for freedmen, the leases to be for one year. Existing leases made by special agents of the Treasury Department are confirmed. Whenever the commissioner cannot otherwise employ any of the freedmen who may come under his care, he shall, so far as practicable, make provision for them with humane and suitable persons, at a just compensation for their services. The commissioner to report annually to Congress. All assistant quartermasters, local superintendents, and clerks, as well as supervising special agents, are declared to be in the military service of the United States, and liable to trial by court-martial or military commissions. Section 13 applies to confiscation, and is as follows:

That the last clause of a joint resolution explanatory of "An act to suppress insurrection, to punish treason and rebellion, to seize and confiscate the property of rebels, and for other purposes," approved July 17, 1862, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

A motion to table the report was lost—yeas 67, nays 83.

February 9—The report was adopted—yeas 64, nays 62, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Arnold, Ashley, John D. Baldwin, Baxter, Beaman, Boutwell, Boyd, Broomall, Ambrose W. Clark, Cobb, Cole, Dawes, Deming, Donnelly, Eckley, Eliot, Frank, Grinnell, Hooper, John H. Hubbard, Hulburd, Ingersoll, Jencks, Julian, Kasson, Kelley, Orlando Kellogg, Knox, Littlejohn, Loan, Longyear, Marvin, McBride, McClurg, McIndoe, Samuel F. Miller, Morrill, Amos Myers, Leonard Myers, Norton, Charles O'Neill, Orth, Patterson, Pike, Pomeroy, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Edward H. Rollins, Scofield, Sloan, Spalding, Starr, Stevens, Thayer, Upson, Van Valkenburgh, William B. Washburn, Wilder, Wilson, Windom, Woodbridge, Worthington—64.

Steele, Stiles, Strouse, Sweet, Timonsend, Tracy, Wadsworth, Ward, Elihu B. Washburne, Webster, Whaley, Wheeler, Joseph W. White, Winfield—62.

1865, February 22—In Senate, it was rejected—yeas 14, nays 24:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Chandler, Foot, Howard, Morgan, Morrill, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Sprague, Stewart, Sumner, Wade, Wilson—14.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Carlile, Cowan, Davis, Dixon, Doolittle, Grimes, Hale, Harlan, Harris, Henderson, Howe, Johnson, Lane of Indiana, McDougal, Nesmith, Powell, Richardson, Riddle, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Willey, Wright—24.

February 28—A new committee—Messrs. Wilson, Harlan, and Willey, of the Senate, and Schenck, Boutwell, and Jas. S. Rollins, of the House, made a report to establish in the War Department, for the war and one year thereafter, a Bureau of Refugees, Freedmen, and Abandoned Lands, for the supervision and management of all abandoned lands, and the control of all subjects relating to refugees and freedmen from rebel States, or from any district of country within the territory embraced in the operations of the army, under rules to be approved by the President. The bureau to have a Commissioner at $3,000 a year, and $50,000 bonds, with an assistant commissioner for each rebel State, not exceeding ten, at $2,500 a year, and $20,000 bonds. The Assistants to make quarterly reports to the Commissioner, and he a report at each session of Congress.

Section 2 authorizes the Secretary of War to direct such issues of provisions, clothing, and fuel as he may deem needful for the immediate and temporary shelter and supply of destitute and suffering refugees and freedmen, and their wives and children, under such rules and regulations as he may direct.

The bill also gives the Commissioner, under the direction of the President, authority to set apart for the use of loyal refugees and freedmen such tracts of land within the insurrectionary States as shall have been abandoned, or to which the United States shall have acquired title by confiscation, or sale, or otherwise. And to every male citizen, whether refugee or freedman, as aforesaid, there shall be assigned not more than forty acres of such land, and the person to whom it is so assigned shall be protected in the use and enjoyment of the land for the term of three years, at an annual rent not exceeding six per cent upon the value of said land as it was appraised by the State authorities in 1860, for the purpose of taxation and in case no such appraisal can be found, then the rental shall be based upon the estimated value of the land in said year, to be ascertained in such manner as the Commissioner may, by regulation, prescribe. At the end of said term or at any time during said term, the occupants of any parcels so assigned may purchase the land and receive such title thereto as the United States can convey upon paying therefor the value of the land, as ascertained and fixed for the purpose of determining the annual rent as aforesaid.

The report was adopted in Senate.

March 3—It was adopted in the House without a division, after a motion to lay it on the table, made by Mr. Cox, was rejected—yeas 52, nays 77, as follows:

1865, March 4—The amendment was ratified in the Senate, and the House of Representatives, without dissent.

Foreign Policy of the United States.

1864, December 15—Mr. H. WINTER DAVIS, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported this resolution, (being the same as closed his report on page 354:)

Resolved, That Congress has a constitutional right to an authoritative voice in declaring and prescribing the foreign policy of the United States as well in the recognition of new powers as in other matters; and it is the constitutional duty of the President to respect that policy, not less in diplomatic negotiations than in the use of the national force when authorized by law; and the propriety of any declaration of foreign policy by Congress is sufficiently proved by the vote which pronounces it; and such proposition, while pending and undetermined, is not a fit topic of diplomatic explanation with any foreign power.

Which was laid on the table—yeas 70, nays 63, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Ames, Anderson, Arnold, Baily, John D. Baldwin, Baxter, Beaman, Blaine, Blair, Boutwell, Boyd, Broomall, Ambrose W. Clark, Cobb, Cole, Thomas T. Financial.

The following bills were passed:

1865, January 23—Authorized, in lieu of any bonds under act of June 30, 1864, Treasury notes of the description and character authorized in second section thereof, limiting the bonds and notes to $400,000,000, exempting the notes from taxation by or under State or muniprincipal authority, and providing that "such Treasury notes may be disposed of for lawful money, or for any other Treasury notes or certificates of indebtedness, or certificates of deposit issued under any previous act of Congress," and that the act shall not be construed to give authority for the issue of any legal-tender notes, in any form, beyond the balance unissued of the amount authorized by the second section of the act of June 30, 1864.

1865, March 3—Authorized $600,000,000 in bonds and Treasury notes—the bonds to be not less than $50 and payable at any period not more than forty years or redeemable after any period not less than five nor more than forty; the Treasury notes to be convertible into the bonds, be of such denominations (not less than $50,) bearing such dates, and be made redeema-ble or payable at the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury. Interest on bonds to be payable semi-annually; on Treasury notes semi-annually, annually, or at maturity; and the principal, or interest, or both, may be made payable in coin or other lawful money; the interest, if payable in coin, not to exceed 6 per cent; if not so payable in coin, not to exceed 7.3 Bonds authorized under act of June 30, 1864, may be of the description herein authorized; and any Treasury notes or interest-bearing obligations may be converted into any description of bonds herein authorized, and they shall not be considered a part of the $600,000,000 herein provided for.

No new principle was involved, and it is not considered necessary to trace a struggle upon matters of detail.

Oath of Allegiance for Lawyers.

IN SENATE.

1864, December 21—Mr. HARLAN offered this resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on the District of Columbia be instructed to inquire into the expediency and propriety of requiring all residents of the District of Columbia to take and file with the provost marshal of said District an oath of allegiance or fidelity to the Government of the United States similar to the oath required by law of Members and Senators in Congress and other officers of the Government; and also the expediency and propriety of prohibiting all persons from doing business in said District or with the several Departments of the Government who have not or may not take and file such oath; and that said committee have leave to report by bill or otherwise.

Which was agreed to—yeas 24, nays 10, as Abolition of Slavery in West Virginia.

This record completes that made on pages 377, 378:

Both Houses of the Legislature of West Virginia have passed this bill, which has become a law:

Be it enacted by the Legislature of West Virginia:

1. All persons held to service or labor as slaves in this State are hereby declared free.

2. There shall hereafter be neither slavery nor involuntary servitude in this State except in punishment of crime, whereof the party shall have been duly convicted.

The Wheeling Intelligencer says: "This bill wipes out the remnant of slavery in West Virginia at a blow. It was not offered or passed as an amendment to the Constitution. The Constitution simply prescribes a limit beyond which certain persons of certain ages shall not be held slaves, and makes no enactment at all in regard to those supposed to be left in slavery for life."

Letter of Horace Greeley to the President, Preceding the Niagara Falls Negotiation.

As part of the history of the negotiation recorded on pages 301-303, this letter of Mr. Greeley, until recently unpublished, is given. It is understood that there are other letters from several parties not yet divulged:

NEW YORK, July 7, 1864.

MY DEAR SIR: I venture to inclose you a letter and telegraphic despatch that I received yesterday from our irrepressible friend Colorado Jewett, at Niagara Falls. I think they deserve attention. Of course I do not endorse Jewett's positive avowal that his friends at the Falls have "full powers" from J. D., though I do not doubt that he thinks they have. I let that statement stand as simply evidencing the anxiety of the Confederates everywhere for peace. So much is beyond doubt.

And, therefore, I venture to remind you that our bleeding, bankrupt, almost dying country also longs for peace—shudders at the prospect of fresh conscriptions, of further wholesale devastations, and of new rivers of human blood; and a wide-spread conviction that the government and its prominent supporters are not anxious for peace, and do not

* These proceedings took place at the First Session of the Thirty-Eighth Congress:

IN SENATE.

1863, December 17.—Mr. SUMNER offered this as a new rule for the Senate:

The oath or affirmation prescribed by act of Congress of July 2, 1862, to be taken and subscribed before entering upon the duties of office, shall be taken and subscribed by every Senator, in open Senate, before entering upon his duties. It shall also be taken and subscribed in the same way by the Secretary of the Senate; but the other officers of the Senate may take and subscribe it in the office of the Secretary.

Decem. or 18.—Mr. SAULSBURY moved this substitute: That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire whether Senators and Representatives in Congress are included within the provisions of the act entitled "An Act to prescribe an oath of office, and for other purposes," approved July 2, 1862, and whether the said act is in accordance or in conflict with the Constitution of the United States.

A motion to refer to the Committee on the Judiciary was lost—yeas 15, nays 26.

1864, January 21.—Mr. SAULSBURY's substitute was lost—yeas 12, nays 26. THE YEAS were: Messrs. Buckalew, Carlile, Cowan, Davis, Harding, Henderson, Hendricks, Johnson, Powell, Saulsbury, Willey, Wright.

January 25.—The new rule was adopted—yeas 23, nays 11, as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Chandler, Clark, Collier, Conness, Dixon, Fessenden, Foster, Grimes, Hale, Harlan, Henderson, Howard, Lane of Kansas, Morgan, Morrill, Ramsey, Sherman, Sprague, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wade, Wilkinson, Willey, Wilson—28.

improve proffered opportunities to achieve it, is doing great harm now, and is morally certain, unless removed, to do far greater in the approaching elections.

It is not enough that we anxiously desire a true and lasting peace; we ought to demonstrate and establish the truth beyond cavil. The fact that A. H. Stephens was not permitted a year ago to visit and confer with the authorities at Washington has done harm, which the tone at the late National Convention at Baltimore is not calculated to counteract.

I entreat you, in your own time and manner, to submit overtures for pacification to the Southern insurgents, which the impartial must pronounce frank and generous. If only with a view to the momentous election soon to occur in North Carolina, and of the draft to be enforced in the free States, this should be done at once. I would give the safe conduct required by the rebel envoys at Niagara upon their parole to avoid observation and to refrain from all communication with their sympathizers in the loyal States; but you may see reasons for declining it. But whether through them or otherwise, do not, I entreat you, fail to make the Southern people comprehend that you, and all of us, are anxious for peace, and prepared to grant liberal terms. I venture to suggest the following

PLAN OF ADJUSTMENT.

1. The Union is restored and declared perpetual.
2. Slavery is utterly and forever abolished throughout the same.

3. A complete amnesty for all political offences, with a restoration of all the inhabitants of each State to the privileges of citizens of the United States.

4. The Union to pay four hundred million dollars in five per cent. United States stock to the late slave States, loyal and secession alike, to be apportioned pro rata, according to their slave population respectively, by the census of 1860, in compensation for the losses of their loyal citizens by the abolition of slavery. Each State to be entitled to its quota upon the ratification by its Legislature of this adjustment. The bonds to be at the absolute disposal of the Legislature aforesaid.

5. The said slave States to be entitled henceforth to representation in the House on the basis of their total instead of their Federal population, the whole now being free.

6. A National Convention, to be assembled so soon as may be, to ratify this adjustment, and make such changes in the Constitution as may be deemed advisable.

Mr. President, I fear you do not realize how intently the people desire any peace consistent with the National integrity and honor, and how joyously they would hail its achievement and bless its authors. With United States stocks worth but forty cents in gold per dollar, and drafting about to commence on the third million of Union soldiers, can this be wondered at?

I do not say that a just peace is now attainable, though I believe it to be so. But I do say that a frank offer by you to the insurgents of terms which the impartial say ought to be accepted, will, at the worst, prove an immense and sorely needed advantage to the national cause. It may save us from a Northern insurrection.

Yours, truly,

HORACE GREELEY.

Hon. A. LINCOLN, President, Washington, D. C.

P. S.—Even though it should be deemed unadvisable to make an offer of terms to the rebels, I insist that, in any possible case, it is desirable that any offer they may be disposed to make should be received, and either accepted or rejected. I beg you to invite those now at Niagara to exhibit their credentials and submit their ultimatum.

The Menonites on the War.

The religious society known as the "Menonites," at their annual Conference held at Germantown, Pa. March 6 and 7, 1865, passed a series of resolutions sustaining the government, in its efforts to crush the rebellion. Among them are the following:

Resolved, That the success of our arms on sea and land during the last year calls aloud for thanksgiving and praise to Almighty God, who alone is the giver of victory, and in whose hands are the destinies of men and nations.

Resolved, That the present war is a struggle between truth and error, right and wrong, freedom and bondage.

Resolved, That we have unflinching confidence in the Chief Executive of our nation; in the honest purposes of his heart; in his fidelity to God and the best interests of the whole people, and to the sublime principles of freedom and justice the wide world over.

Resolved, That we pledge him our undivided support and most ardent prayers in his efforts to maintain our national honor untarnished, and crush out the last vestige of this slaveholders' foul rebellion.

Resolved, That it is the duty of every Christian patriot to pray for the President and all that are high in authority; for our soldiers and seamen, and for the success of our arms; and that he, who in the hour of his country's travail stands not up manfully to vindicate her cause, or withholds his support from the government whose fostering care has guaranteed him all the rights and immunities of citizenship, is recreant to God and false to the highest principles of truth and justice, and unworthy the name of an American citizen.

PROCLAMATIONS.

FOR THREE HUNDRED THOUSAND MEN.†

Whereas, by the act approved July 4, 1864, entitled "An act further to regulate and provide for the enrolling and calling out the national forces, and for other purposes," it is provided that the President of the United States may "at his discretion at any time hereafter call for any number of men as volunteers for the respective terms of one, two and three years for military service," and "that in case the quota or any part thereof, of any town, township, ward of a city, precinct or election district, or of a county not so subdivided, shall not be filled within the space of fifty days after such call, then the President shall immediately order a draft for one year, to fill such quota or any part thereof which may be unfilled;" and whereas, by the credits allowed in accordance with the act of Congress on the call for five hundred thousand men, made July 18th, 1864, the number of men to be obtained under that call was reduced to 250,000; and whereas, the operations of the enemy in certain States have rendered it impracticable to procure from them their full quotas of troops, under said call; and whereas, from the foregoing causes but 250,000 men have been put into the army, navy, and marine corps, under the said call of July 18, 1864, leaving a deficiency on that call of 250,000; now, therefore, I, ABRAHAM LINCOLN, President of the United States of America, in order to supply the aforesaid deficiency, and to provide for casualties in the military and naval service of the United States, do issue this, my call, for Three Hundred Thousand Volunteers to serve for one, two or three years. The quotas of the States, districts and sub-districts under this call will be assigned by the War Department through the Bureau of the Provost Marshal General of the United States, and "in case the quota or any part thereof, of any town, township, ward of a city, precinct or election district, or of a county, not so subdivided, shall not be filled" before the 15th day of February, 1865, then a draft shall be made to fill such quota, or any part thereof under this call, which may be unfilled on said 15th day of February, 1865.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the city of Washington, this 19th day of December, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-four, and of the Independence of the United States of America the eighty-ninth.

† For other calls, see pages 114, 115, and 270. 1865, April 13—Secretary STANTON sent this telegram to Major General DIX:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
WASHINGTON, D. C., April 13, 6 P. M.
Major General DIX, New York:

This department, after mature consideration and consultation with the Lieutenant General upon the result of the recent campaign, has come to the following determinations, which will be carried into effect by appropriate orders immediately to be issued:

First. To stop all drafting and recruiting in the loyal States.

Second. To curtail purchases for arms, ammunition, quartermaster and commissary supplies, and reduce the expenses of the military establishment in its several branches.

Third. To reduce the number of general and staff officers to the actual necessities of the service.

Fourth. To remove all military restriction upon trade and commerce, so far as may be consistent with public safety.

As soon as these measures can be put in operation, it will be made known by public orders.

EDWIN M. STANTON,
Secretary of War.

PARDON TO DESERTERS.

Whereas, the twenty-first section of the act of Congress, approved on the third instant, entitled "An act to amend the several acts heretofore passed to provide for the enrolling and calling out the national forces, and for other purposes," requires "that in addition to the other lawful penalties of the crime of desertion from the military and naval service, all persons who have deserted the military or naval service of the United States who shall not return to said service, or report themselves to a provost marshal within sixty days after the proclamation hereinafter mentioned, shall be deemed and taken to have voluntarily relinquished and forfeited their rights of citizenship and their rights to become citizens, and such deserters shall be forever incapable of holding any office of trust or profit under the United States, or of exercising any rights of citizens thereof; and all persons who shall hereafter desert the military or naval service, and all persons who, being duly enrolled, shall depart the jurisdiction of the district in which he is enrolled, or go beyond the limits of the United States with intent to avoid any draft into the military or naval service, duly ordered, shall be liable to the penalties of this section. And the President is hereby authorized and required forthwith, on the passage of this act, to issue his proclamation setting forth the provisions of this section, in which proclamation the President is requested to notify all deserters returning within sixty days, as aforesaid, that they shall be pardoned on condition of returning to their regiments and companies, or to such other organizations as they may be assigned to, until they shall have served for a period of time equal to their original term of enlistment."

Now, therefore, be it known that I, ABRAHAM LINCOLN, President of the United States, do issue this my proclamation, as required by said act, ordering and requiring all deserters to return to their proper posts; and I do hereby notify them that all deserters who shall, within sixty days from the date of this proclamation, viz: on or before the 10th day of May, 1865, return to service, or report themselves to a provost marshal, shall be pardoned, on condition that they return to their regiments and companies, or to such other organizations as they may be assigned to, and serve the remainder of their original terms of enlistment, and, in addition thereto, a period equal to the time lost by desertion.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand, and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

A WARNING TO BLOCKADE-RUNNERS AND OTHERS.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
WASHINGTON, March 14, 1865.

The President directs that all persons who now are, or hereafter shall be, found within the United States, and who have been engaged in holding intercourse or trade with the insurgents by sea, if they are citizens of the United States or domiciled aliens, be arrested and held as prisoners of war until the war shall close, subject, nevertheless, to prosecution, trial, and conviction for any offence committed by them as spies, or otherwise against the laws of war.

The President further directs that all non-resident foreigners who now are, or hereafter shall be, found in the United States, and who have been or shall hereafter be engaged in violating the blockade of the insurgent ports, shall leave the United States within twelve days from the publication of this order, or from their subsequent arrival in the United States, if on the Atlantic side, and forty days if on the Pacific side of the country. And such persons shall not return to the United States during the continuance of the war.

Provost Marshals and Marshals of the United States will arrest and commit to military custody all such offenders as shall disregard this order, whether they have passports or not, and they will be detained in such custody until the end of the war, or until discharged by subsequent order of the President.

WILLIAM H. SEWARD,
Secretary of State.

A REWARD OFFERED FOR THE ARREST OF RAIDERS.

The following has been promulgated by the Secretary of State:

To all whom these presents may concern:

Whereas for some time past evil disposed persons have crossed the borders of the United States, or entered their ports by sea from countries where they are tolerated, and have committed capital felonies against the property and life of American citizens, as well in the cities as in the rural districts of the country:

Now, therefore, in the name and by the authority of the President of the United States, I do hereby make known that a reward of one thousand dollars will be paid at this Department for the capture of each of such offenders, upon his conviction by a civil or military tribunal, to whomsoever shall arrest and deliver such offenders into the custody of the civil or military authorities of the United States; and the like reward will be paid, upon the same terms, for the capture of any such persons so entering the United States whose offences shall be committed subsequently to the publication of this notice. A reward of five hundred dollars will be paid, upon conviction, for the arrest of any person who shall have aided and abetted offences of the class before named within the territory of the United States.

Given under my hand and the seal of the Department of State, at Washington, this fourth day of April, A. D. 1865

WILLIAM H. SEWARD,
Secretary of State.

CLOSING CERTAIN PORTS.

Whereas by my proclamations of the nineteenth and twenty-seventh days of April, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-one, the ports of the United States in the States of Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, and Texas were declared to be subject to blockade; but whereas the said blockade has, in consequence of actual military occupation by this Government, since been conditionally set aside or relaxed in respect to the ports of Norfolk and Alexandria, in the State of Virginia; Beaufort, in the State of North Carolina; Port Royal, in the State of South Carolina; Pensacola and Fernandina, in the State of Florida, and New Orleans, in the State of Louisiana:

And whereas, by the fourth section of the act of Congress, approved on the thirteenth of July, eighteen hundred and sixty-one, entitled "An act further to provide for the collection of duties on imports and for other purposes," the President, for the reasons therein set forth, is authorized to close certain ports of entry:

Now, therefore, be it known that I, ABRAHAM LINCOLN, President of the United States, do hereby proclaim that the ports of Richmond, Tappahannock, Cherrystone, Yorktown, and Petersburg, in Virginia; of Camden, (Elizabeth City,) Edenton, Plymouth, Washington, Newbern, Ocracoke, and Wilmington, in North Carolina; of Charleston, Georgetown, and Beaufort, in South Carolina; of Savannah, St. Mary's, and Brunswick, (Darieu,) in Georgia; of Mobile, in Alabama; of Pearl river, (Shieldsborough,) Natchez, and Vicksburg, in Mississippi; of St. Augustine, Key West, St. Marks, (Port Leon), St. Johns, (Jacksonville,) and Apalachicola, in Florida; of Teche, (Franklin,) in Louisiana; of Galveston, La Salle, Brazos de Santiago, (Point Isabel,) and Brownsville, Texas, are hereby closed, and all right of importation, warehousing, and other privileges shall, in respect to the ports aforesaid, cease until they shall have again been opened by order of the President; and if, while said ports are so closed, any ship or vessel from beyond the United States, or having on board any articles subject to duties, shall attempt to enter any such port, the same, together with its tackle, apparel, furniture, and cargo shall be forfeited to the United States.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

EQUALITY OF RIGHTS WITH ALL MARITIME NATIONS.

Whereas for some time past vessels of war of the United States have been refused, in certain foreign ports, privileges and immunities to which they were entitled by treaty, public law, or the comity of nations, at the same time that vessels of war of the country wherein the said privileges and immunities have been withheld have enjoyed them fully and uninterruptedly in ports of the United States; which condition of things has not always been forcibly resisted by the United States, although, on the other hand, they have not at any time failed to protest against and declare their dissatisfaction with the same; in the view of the United States no condition any longer exists which can be claimed to justify the denial to them by any one of said nations of customary naval rights such as has heretofore been so unnecessarily persisted in:

Now, therefore, I, ABRAHAM LINCOLN, President of the United States, do hereby make known, that if after a reasonable time shall have elapsed for intelligence of this proclamation to have reached any foreign country in whose ports the said privileges and immunities shall have been refused, as aforesaid, they shall continue to be so refused, then and thenceforth the same privileges and immunities shall be refused to the vessels of war of that country in the ports of the United States; and this refusal shall continue until war vessels of the United States shall have been placed upon an entire equality in the foreign ports aforesaid with similar vessels of other countries. The United States, whatever claim or pretence may have existed heretofore, are now, at least, entitled to claim and concede an entire and friendly equality of rights and hospitalities with all maritime nations.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

PORT OF KEY WEST.

Whereas, by my proclamation of this date the port of Key West, in the State of Florida, was inadvertently included among those which are not open to commerce:

Now, therefore, be it known that I, ABRAHAM LINCOLN, President of the United States, do hereby declare and make known that the said port of Key West is and shall remain open to foreign and domestic commerce upon the same conditions by which that commerce has there hitherto been governed.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

OBSERVANCE OF THE SABBATH.

EXECUTIVE MANSION.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 16, 1864.

The President, Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy, desires and enjoins the orderly observance of the Sabbath by the officers and men in the military and naval service. The importance for man and beast of the prescribed weekly rest, the sacred rights of Christian soldiers and sailors, a becoming deference to the best sentiment of Christian people, and a due regard for the Divine will, demand that Sunday labor in the Army and Navy be reduced to the measure of strict necessity.

The discipline and character of the national forces should not suffer, nor the cause they defend be imperiled, by the profanation of the day or name of the Most High. "At this time of public distress"—adopting the words of Washington in 1776—"men may find enough to do in the service of their God and their country without abandoning themselves to vice and immorality." The first General Order issued by the Father of his Country after the Declaration of Independence, indicates the spirit in which our institutions were founded and should ever be defended: "The General hopes and trusts that every officer and man will endeavor to live and act as becomes a Christian soldier, defending the dearest rights and liberties of his country."

ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

LETTERS.

TO MRS. ELIZA P. GURNEY.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,

WASHINGTON, September 30, 1864.

MY ESTEEMED FRIEND: I have not forgotten, probably never shall forget, the very impressive occasion when yourself and friends visited me on a Sabbath forenoon two years ago. Nor had your kind letter, written nearly a year later, ever been forgotten. In all it has been your purpose to strengthen my reliance in God. I am much indebted to the good Christian people of the country for their constant prayers and consolations, and to no one of them more than to yourself. The purposes of the Almighty are perfect and must prevail, though we erring mortals may fail to accurately perceive them in advance. We hoped for a happy termination of this terrible war long before this; but God knows best, and has ruled otherwise. We shall yet acknowledge His wisdom and our own errors therein; meanwhile we must work earnestly in the best light He gives us, trusting that so working still conduces to the great ends He ordains. Surely He intends some great good to follow this mighty convulsion which no mortal could make, and no mortal could stay.

Your people—the Friends—have had, and are having, very great trials, on principles and faith opposed to both war and oppression. They can only practically oppose oppression by war. In this hard dilemma, some have chosen one horn and some the other.

For those appealing to me on conscientious grounds I have done and shall do the best I could and can in my own conscience under my oath to the law. That you believe this I doubt not, and believing it I shall still receive for my country and myself your earnest prayers to our Father in Heaven. Your sincere friend,

A. LINCOLN.

TO DEACON JOHN PHILLIPS.

Deacon John Phillips, of Sturbridge, Massachusetts, whose great age—one hundred and four years—did not prevent him from voting on the 8th of November, received the following letter from the PRESIDENT:

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
WASHINGTON, Nov. 21, 1864.

MY DEAR SIR: I have heard of the incident at the polls in your town, in which you acted so honorable a part, and I take the liberty of writing to you to express my personal gratitude for the compliment paid me by the suffrage of a citizen so venerable.

The example of such devotion to civic duties in one whose days have already been extended an average lifetime beyond the Psalmist's limit, cannot but be valuable and fruitful. It is not for myself only, but for the country, which you have in your sphere served so long and so well, that I thank you. Your friend and servant,

A. LINCOLN.

DEACON JOHN PHILLIPS.

TO MRS. BIXBY.

Mrs. Bixby, the recipient of the following letter from President LINCOLN, is a poor widow living in the Eleventh Ward of Boston. Her sixth son was severely wounded in a recent battle:

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
WASHINGTON, Nov. 21, 1864.

DEAR MADAM: I have been shown on the file of the War Department a statement of the Adjutant General of Massachusetts, that you are the mother of five sons who have died gloriously on the field of battle.

I feel how weak and fruitless must be any word of mine which should attempt to beguile you from the grief of a loss so overwhelming; but I cannot refrain from tendering to you the consolation that may be found in the thanks of the Republic they died to save.

I pray that our Heavenly Father may assuage the anguish of your bereavements, and leave only the cherished memory of the loved and lost, and the solemn pride that must be yours to have laid so costly a sacrifice upon the altar of freedom.

Yours, very sincerely and respectfully,

A. LINCOLN.

To Mrs. BIXBY, Boston, Mass.

TO THE NEW ENGLAND SOCIETY.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
WASHINGTON, December 19, 1864.

MY DEAR SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the reception of your kind invitation to be present at the annual festival of the New England Society to commemorate the landing of the Pilgrims, on Thursday, the 22d of this month.

My duties will not allow me to avail myself of your kindness.

I cannot but congratulate you and the country, however, upon the spectacle of devoted unanimity, presented by the people at home, the citizens that form our marching columns, and the citizens that fill our squadrons on the sea, all animated by the same determination to complete the work our fathers began and transmitted.

The work of the Plymouth emigrants was the glory of their age. While we reverence their memory, let us not forget how vastly greater is our opportunity. I am, very truly, your obedient servant,

A. LINCOLN.

JOSEPH H. CHOATE, Esq.

TO A SOLDIERS' FAIR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
WASHINGTON, December 19, 1864.

To the Ladies managing the Soldiers' Fair at Springfield, Mass.:

Your kind invitation to be present at the opening of your fair is duly received by the hand of Mr. Ashmun. Grateful for the compliment, and ever anxious to aid the good cause in which you are engaged, I yet am compelled, by public duties here, to decline. The recent good news from Generals Sherman, Thomas, and, indeed, from nearly all quarters, will be far better than my presence, and will afford all the impulse and enthusiasm you will need.

Your obedient servant,

A. LINCOLN.

ON AFFAIRS IN MISSOURI.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
WASHINGTON, February 20, 1865.

His Excellency Governor Fletcher:

It seems that there is now no organized military force of the enemy in Missouri, and yet that destruction of property and life is rampant everywhere. Is not the cure for this within easy reach of the people themselves? It cannot but be that every man, not naturally a robber or cut-throat, would gladly put an end to this state of things. A large majority in every locality must feel alike upon this subject; and if so, they only need to reach an understanding, one with another. Each leaving all others alone solves the problem; and surely each would do this but for his apprehension that others will not leave him alone. Cannot this mischievous distrust be removed? Let neighborhood meetings be everywhere called and held of all entertaining a sincere purpose for mutual security in the future, whatever they may heretofore have thought, said, or done about the war or about anything else. Let all such meet, and, waiving all else, pledge each to cease harassing others, and to make common cause against whoever persists in making, aiding, or encouraging further disturbance. The practical means they will best know how to adopt and apply. At such meetings old friendships will cross the memory, and honor and Christian charity will come in to help.

Please consider whether it may not be well to suggest this to the now afflicted people of Missouri.

Yours, truly,

A. LINCOLN.

ON EMPLOYING DISABLED SOLDIERS.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
WASHINGTON, March 1, 1865.

GENTLEMEN: I have received your address, on the part of the Bureau for the Employment of Disabled and Discharged Soldiers, which has recently been established in connection with the Protective War Claim Association of the Sanitary Commission.

It gives me pleasure to assure you of my hearty concurrence with the purposes you announce, and I shall at all times be ready to recognize the paramount claims of the soldiers of the nation in the disposition of public trusts. I shall be glad, also, to make these suggestions to the several heads of departments.

I am, very truly, your obedient servant,

A. LINCOLN

To Lieut. Gen WINFIELD SCOTT, President; HOWARD POTTER, WM. E. DODGE, JR., THEO. ROOSEVELT, Esqs.

ADDRESSES.

AT THE CONSECRATION OF THE NATIONAL CEMETERY, GETTYSBURG, NOVEMBER 19, 1863.

FOURSCORE and seven years ago our fathers brought forth upon this continent a new nation, conceived in Liberty, and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal.

Now we are engaged in a great civil war, testing whether that nation, or any nation so conceived and so dedicated, can long endure. We are met on a great battle-field of that war. We are met to dedicate a portion of it as the final resting place of those who here gave their lives that that nation might live. It is altogether fitting and proper that we should do this.

But in a larger sense we cannot dedicate, we cannot consecrate, we cannot hallow this ground. The brave men, living and dead, who struggled here, have consecrated it far above our power to add or detract. The world will little note nor long remember what we say here, but it can never forget what they did here. It is for us, the living, rather to be dedicated here to the unfinished work that they have thus far so nobly carried on. It is rather for us to be here dedicated to the great task remaining before us,—that from these honored dead we take increased devotion to the cause for which they here gave the last full measure of devotion,—that we here highly resolve that the dead shall not have died in vain, that the nation shall, under God, have a new birth of freedom, and that the government of the people, by the people, and for the people, shall not perish from the earth.

TO A COMMITTEE OF THE NEW YORK WORKINGMEN'S REPUBLICAN ASSOCIATION.

1864, March 21—The PRESIDENT, replying to their address, said:

GENTLEMEN OF THE COMMITTEE: The honorary membership in your association so generously tendered is gratefully accepted. You comprehend, as your address shows, that the existing rebellion means more and tends to more than the perpetuation of African slavery; that it is in fact a war upon the rights of all working people. Partly to show that the view has not escaped my attention, and partly that I cannot better express myself, I read a passage from the message to Congress in December, 1861. (See pages 135, 136.)

The views then expressed remain unchanged, nor have I much to add. None are so deeply interested to resist the present rebellion as the working people. Let them beware of prejudices working disunion and hostility among themselves. The most notable feature of a disturbance in your city last summer was the hanging of some working people by other working people. It should never be so. The strongest bond of human sympathy, outside of the family relation, should be one uniting all working people, of all nations, tongues, and kindreds. Nor should this lead to a war upon property or the owners of property. Property is the fruit of labor; property is desirable; is a positive good in the world. That some should be rich shows that others may become rich, and hence is just encouragement to industry and enterprise. Let not him who is houseless pull down the house of another, but let him labor diligently and build one for himself; thus by example assuring that his own shall be safe from violence when built.

TO A CLUB OF PENNSYLVANIANS.

November 8—The PRESIDENT, at a late hour in the night, was serenaded by a club of Pennsylvanians, and spoke as follows:

FRIENDS AND FELLOW-CITIZENS: Even before I had been informed by you that this compliment was paid me by loyal citizens of Pennsylvania friendly to me, I had intimated that you were of that portion of my countrymen who think that the best interests of the nation are to be subserved by the support of the present Administration. I do not pretend to say that you who think so embrace all the patriotism and loyalty of the country; but I do believe, and, I trust, without personal interest, that the welfare of the country does require that such support and endorsement be given.

I earnestly believe that the consequences of this day's work (if it be as you assure, and as now seems probable) will be to the lasting advantage, if not to the very salvation, of the country. I cannot at this hour say what has been the result of the election. But whatever it may be, I have no desire to modify this opinion, that all who have labored to-day in behalf of the Union organization have wrought for the best interests of their country and the world, not only for the present but for all future ages.

I am thankful to God for this approval of the people; but, while deeply gratified for this mark of their confidence in me, if I know my heart, my gratitude is free from any taint of personal triumph. I do not impugn the motives of any one opposed to me. It is no pleasure to me to triumph over any one; but I give thanks to the Almighty for this evidence of the people's resolution to stand by free government and the rights of humanity.

TO SUNDRY POLITICAL CLUBS.

November 10—The several Lincoln and Johnson Clubs of the District of Columbia called on the PRESIDENT, and gave him a serenade in honor of his re-election. There was, in addition, an immense concourse of spectators of both sexes in front of the Executive mansion.

The PRESIDENT appeared at an upper window, and when the cheers with which he was greeted had ceased, he spoke as follows:

It has long been a grave question whether any Government, not too strong for the liberties of its people, can be strong enough to maintain its existence in great emergencies.

On this point the present rebellion has brought our Republic to a severe test, and a Presidential election, occurring in regular course during the rebellion, has added not a little to the strain. If the loyal people, united, were put to the utmost of their strength by the rebellion, must they not fail when divided, and partially paralyzed by a political war among themselves?

But the election was a necessity. We cannot have a free Government without elections; and if the rebellion could force us to forego or postpone a national election, it might fairly claim to have already conquered and ruined us.

The strife of the election is but human nature practically applied to the facts in the case. What has occurred in this case must ever recur in similar cases. Human nature will not change. In any future great national trial, compared with the men who have passed through this, we shall have as weak and as strong, as silly and as wise, as bad and as good. Let us therefore study the incidents of this as philosophy to learn wisdom from, and none of them as wrongs to be revenged. [Cheers.]

But the election, along with its incidental and undesired strife, has done good, too. It has demonstrated that a people's Government can sustain a national election in the midst of a great civil war. [Renewed cheers.] Until now it has not been known to the world that this was a possibility. It shows, also, how sound and how strong we still are. It shows that, even among candidates of the same party, he who is most devoted to the Union, and most opposed to treason, can receive most of the people's vote. [Applause.]

It shows, also, to the extent yet unknown, that we have more men now than we had when the war began. Gold is good in its place, but living, brave, patriotic men, are better than gold. [Cheers and other demonstrations of applause.]

But the rebellion continues; and now that the election is over, may not all having a common interest re-unite in a common effort to save our common country? [Cheers.]

For my own part, I have striven, and shall strive, to avoid placing any obstacle in the way. [Cheers.] So long as I have been here I have not willingly planted a thorn in any man's bosom. While I am deeply sensible to the high compliment of a re-election, and duly grateful, as I trust, to Almighty God for having directed my countrymen to a right conclusion, as I think, for their own good, it adds nothing to my satisfaction that any other man may be disappointed or pained by the result. [Cheers.] May I ask those who have not differed with me to join with me in this same spirit towards those who have?

And now let me close by asking three hearty cheers for our brave soldiers and seamen, and their gallant and skillful commanders.

TO A MARYLAND COMMITTEE.

November 17—A committee of Maryland Union men called upon the PRESIDENT.

W. H. Purnell, Esq., in behalf of the Committee, delivered an address, in which he said they rejoiced that the people, by such an overwhelming and unprecedented majority, had again re-elected Mr. Lincoln to the Presidency and endorsed his course—elevating him to the proudest and most honorable position on earth. They felt under deep obligation to him, because he had appreciated their condition as a Slave State. It was not too much to say that by the exercise of rare discretion on his part, Maryland to-day occupies her position in favor of freedom. Slavery has been abolished therefrom by the sovereign decree of the people. With deep and lasting gratitude they desired that his Administration, as it had been approved in the past, might also be successful in the future, and result in the restoration of the Union, with freedom as its immutable basis. They trusted that on retiring from his high and honorable position the universal verdict might be that he deserved well of mankind, and that favoring heaven might "crown his days with loving kindness and tender mercies."

The PRESIDENT, in reply, said he had to confess he had been duly notified of the intention to make this friendly call some days ago, and in this he had had a fair opportunity afforded to be ready with a set speech; but he had not prepared one, being too busy for that purpose. He would say, however, that he was gratified with the result of the Presidential election. He had kept as near as he could to the exercise of his best judgment for the interest of the whole country, and to have the seal of approbation stamped on the course he had pursued was exceedingly grateful to his feelings. He thought he could say, in as large a sense as any other man, that his pleasure consisted in belief that the policy he had pursued was the best, if not the only one, for the safety of the country.

He had said before, and now repeated, that he indulged in no feeling of triumph over any man who thought or acted differently from himself. He had no such feeling towards any living man. When he thought of Maryland, in particular, he was of the opinion that she had more than double her share in what had occurred in the recent elections. The adoption of a free State constitution was a greater thing than the part taken by the people of the State in the Presidential election. He would any day have stipulated to lose Maryland in the Presidential election to save it by the adoption of a free State constitution, because the Presidential election comes every four years, while that is a thing which, being done, cannot be undone. He therefore thought that in that they had a victory for the right, worth a great deal more than their part in the Presidential election, though of the latter he thought lightly. He had once before said, but would say again, that those who have differed with us and opposed us will see that the result of the Presidential election is better for their own good than if they had been successful.

Thanking the Committee for their compliment, he brought his brief speech to a close.

ON THE ADOPTION OF THE ANTI-SLAVERY CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT.

1865, February 1—A large delegation called at the Executive Mansion.

After the band had played one or two favorite airs, the PRESIDENT appeared at the centre upper window, under the portico, and his appearance was greeted with loud cheers, and when they had subsided the PRESIDENT said he supposed the passage through Congress of the constitutional amendment for the abolishment of slavery throughout the United States was the occasion to which he was indebted for the honor of this call. [Applause.] The occasion was one of congratulation to the country and the whole world. But there is a task yet before us—to go forward and have consummated by the votes of the States that which Congress had so nobly begun yesterday. [Applause, and cries of "They will do it," &c.] He had the honor to inform those present that Illinois had already to-day done the work. [Applause.] Maryland was about half through, but he felt proud that Illinois was a little ahead. He thought the measure was a very fitting, if not an indispensable, adjunct to the winding up of this great difficulty. [Applause.] He wished the reunion of all the States perfected, and so effected as to remove all cause of disturbance in the future; and to attain this end it was necessary that the original disturbing cause should, if possible, be rooted out.

He thought all would bear him witness that he had never shrunk from doing all that he could to eradicate slavery by issuing an emancipation proclamation. [Applause.] But that proclamation falls far short of what the amendment will be when fully consummated. A question might be raised whether the proclamation was legally valid. It might be urged that it only aided those who came into our lines, and that it was inoperative as to those who did not give themselves up; or that it would have no effect upon the children of slaves born hereafter; in fact, it would be urged that it did not meet the evil. But the amendment is a king's cure-all for all the evils. [Applause.] It winds the whole thing up. He would repeat that it was the fitting, if not the indispensable, adjunct to the consummation of the great game we are playing. He could not but congratulate all present, himself, the country, and the whole world upon this great moral victory. In conclusion, he thanked those present for the call.

ON BEING OFFICIALLY NOTIFIED OF RE-ELECTION.

Having served four years in the depths of a great and yet unended national peril, I can view this call to a second term in nowise more flattering to myself than as an expression of the public judgment that I may better finish a difficult work, in which I have labored from the first, than could any one less severely schooled to the task. In this view and with assured reliance on that Almighty Ruler who has so graciously sustained us thus far, and with increased gratitude to the generous people for their continued confidence, I accept the renewed trust with its yet onerous and perplexing duties and responsibilities.

PRESIDENT LINCOLN'S SECOND INAUGURAL ADDRESS, MARCH 4, 1865.

FELLOW-COUNTRYMEN: At this second appearing to take the oath of the presidential office, there is less occasion for an extended address than there was at the first. Then, a statement, somewhat in detail, of a course to be pursued, seemed fitting and proper. Now, at the expiration of four years, during which public declarations have been constantly called forth on every point and phase of the great contest which still absorbs the attention and engrosses the energies of the nation, little that is new could be presented. The progress of our arms, upon which all else chiefly depends, is as well known to the public as to myself; and it is, I trust, reasonably satisfactory and encouraging to all. With high hope for the future, no prediction in regard to it is ventured.

On the occasion corresponding to this four years ago, all thoughts were anxiously directed to an impending civil war. All dreaded it—all sought to avert it. While the inaugural address was being delivered from this place, devoted altogether to saving the Union without war, insurgent agents were in the city seeking to destroy it without war—seeking to dissolve the Union, and divide effects, by negotiation. Both parties deprecated war; but one of them would make war rather than let the nation survive; and the other would accept war rather than let it perish. And the war came.

One-eighth of the whole population were colored slaves, not distributed generally over the Union, but localized in the southern part of it. These slaves constituted a peculiar and powerful interest. All knew that this interest was, somehow, the cause of the war. To strengthen, perpetuate and extend this interest was the object for which the insurgents would rend the Union, even by war; while the government claimed no right to do more than to restrict the territorial enlargement of it. Neither party expected for the war the magnitude or the duration which it has already attained. Neither anticipated that the cause of the conflict might cease with, or even before, the conflict itself should cease. Each looked for an easier triumph, and a result less fundamental and astounding. Both read the same Bible, and pray to the same God; and each invokes His aid against the other. It may seem strange that any men should dare to ask a just God's assistance in wringing their bread from the sweat of other men's faces; but let us judge not, that we be not judged. The prayers of both could not be answered—that of neither has been answered fully. The Almighty has His own purposes. "Woe unto the world because of offences!" for it must needs be that offences come; but woe to that man by whom the offence cometh." If we shall suppose that American slavery is one of those offences which, in the providence of God, must needs come, but which, having continued through His appointed time, He now wills to remove, and that He gives to both north and south this terrible war, as the woe due to those by whom the offence came, shall we discern therein any departure from those divine attributes which the believers in a living God always ascribe to Him? Fondly do we hope—ferently do we pray—that this mighty scourge of war may speedily pass away. Yet, if God wills that it continue until all the wealth piled by the bondman's two hundred and fifty years of unrequited toil shall be sunk, and until every drop of blood drawn with the lash shall be paid by another drawn with the sword, as was said three thousand years ago, so still it must be said, "The judgments of the Lord are true and righteous altogether."

With malice toward none; with charity for all; with firmness in the right, as God gives us to see the right, let us strive on to finish the work we are in; to bind up the nation's wounds, to care for him who shall have borne the battle, and for his widow, and his orphan—to do all which may achieve and cherish a just and a lasting peace among ourselves, and with all nations.

ON THE SLAVES FIGHTING FOR THE REBELS.

1865, March 17—On the occasion of the presentation of a captured rebel flag to Gov. Morton, of Indiana, President LINCOLN made these remarks:

FELLOW-CITIZENS: A few words only. I was born in Kentucky, raised in Indiana, reside in Illinois, and now here, it is my duty to care equally for the good people of all the States. I am to-day glad of seeing it in the power of an Indiana regiment to present this captured flag to the good Governor of their State. And yet I would not wish to compliment Indiana above other States, remembering that all have done so well.

There are but few aspects of this great war on which I have not already expressed my views by speaking or writing. There is one—the recent effort of "our erring brethren," sometimes so called, to employ the slaves in their armies. The great question with them has been, "will the negro fight for them?" They ought to know better than we, and doubtless do know better than we. I may incidentally remark, however, that having in my life heard many arguments—or strings of words meant to pass for arguments—intended to show that the negro ought to be a slave; that if he shall now really fight to keep himself a slave, it will be a far better argument why he should remain a slave than I have ever before heard.

He, perhaps, ought to be a slave, if he desires it ardently enough to fight for it. Or, if one out of four will, for his own freedom, fight to keep the other three in slavery, he ought to be a slave for his selfish meanness. I have always thought that all men should be free; but if any should be slaves, it should be first those who desire it for themselves, and secondly those who desire it for others. Whenever I hear any one arguing for slavery, I feel a strong impulse to see it tried on him personally.

There is one thing about the negro's fighting for the rebels which we can know as well as they can; and that is that they cannot at the same time fight in their armies and stay at home and make bread for them. And this being known and remembered, we can have but little concern whether they become soldiers or not. I am rather in favor of the measure, and would at any time, if I could, have loaned them a vote to carry it. We have to reach the bottom of the insurgent resources; and that they employ, or seriously think of employing the slaves as soldiers, gives us glimpses of the bottom. Therefore I am glad of what we learn on this subject.

ON VICTORY AND RECONSTRUCTION.

1865, April 11—After the fall of Richmond and the surrender of the Army of Northern Virginia, President LINCOLN was called upon in Washington, and made these remarks:

We meet this evening not in sorrow, but in gladness of heart. The evacuation of Petersburg and Richmond, and the surrender of the principal insurgent army, give hope of a righteous and speedy peace, whose joyous expression cannot be restrained. In the midst of this, however, He from whom all blessings flow must not be forgotten. A call for a national thanksgiving is being prepared, and will be duly promulgated. Nor must those whose harder part give us the cause of rejoicing be overlooked. Their honors must not be parcelled out with others. I myself was near the front, and had the high pleasure of transmitting much of the good news to you; but no part of the honor, for plan or execution, is mine. To Gen. Grant, his skillful officers and brave men, all belongs. The gallant navy stood ready, but was not in reach to take active part.

By these recent successes, the re-inauguration of the national authority, reconstruction, which has had a large share of thought from the first, is pressed much more closely upon our attention. It is fraught with great difficulty. Unlike the case of a war between independent nations, there is no authorized organ for us to treat with. No one man has authority to give up the rebellion for any other man. We simply must begin with and mould from disorganized and discordant elements. Nor is it a small additional embarrassment that we, the loyal people, differ among ourselves as to the mode, manner, and means of reconstruction.

As a general rule, I abstain from reading the reports of attacks upon myself, wishing not to be provoked by that to which I cannot properly offer an answer. In spite of this precaution, however, it comes to my knowledge that I am much censured from some supposed agency in setting up and seeking to sustain the new State government of Louisiana. In this I have done just so much as, and no more than, the public knows. In the annual message of December, 1863, and accompanying proclamation, I presented a plan of reconstruction (as the phrase goes) which I promised, if adopted by any State, should be acceptable to, and sustained by the Executive Government of the nation. I distinctly stated that this was not the only plan which might possibly be acceptable; and I also distinctly protested that the Executive claimed no right to say when or whether members should be admitted to seats in Congress from such States. This plan was, in advance, submitted to the then Cabinet, and distinctly approved by every member of it. One of them suggested that I should then, and in that connection, apply the Emancipation Proclamation to the theretofore excepted parts of Virginia and Louisiana; that I should drop the suggestion about apprenticeship for freed people, and that I should omit the protest against my own power, in regard to the admission of members of Congress; but even he approved every part and parcel of the plan which has since been employed or touched by the action of Louisiana.

The new Constitution of Louisiana, declaring emancipation for the whole State, practically applies the proclamation to the part previously excepted. It does not adopt apprenticeship for freed people, and it is silent, as it could not well be otherwise, about the admission of members to Congress. So that, as it applies to Louisiana, every member of the Cabinet fully approved the plan. The message went to Congress, and I received many commendations of the plan, written and verbal; and not a single objection to it, from any professed emancipationist, came to my knowledge, until after the news reached Washington that the people of Louisiana had begun to move in accordance with it. From about July, 1862, I had corresponded with different persons supposed to be interested, seeking a reconstruction of a State government for Louisiana. When the message of 1863, with the plan before mentioned, reached New Orleans, Gen. Banks wrote me he was confident that the people, with his military co-operation, would reconstruct substantially on that plan. I wrote him and some of them to try it. They tried it, and the result is known. Such only has been my agency in getting up the Louisiana government. As to sustaining it, my promise is out, as before stated. But as bad promises are better broken than kept, I shall treat this as a bad promise and break it whenever I shall be convinced that keeping it is adverse to the public interest. But I have not yet been so convinced.

I have been shown a letter on this subject, supposed to be an able one, in which the writer expresses regret that my mind has not seemed to be definitely fixed on the question whether the seceded States, so-called, are in the Union or out of it. It would, perhaps, add astonishment to his regret were he to learn that, since I have found professed Union men endeavoring to make that question, I have purposely forborne any public expression upon it. As appears to me, that question has not been, nor yet is, a practically material one, and that any discussion of it, while it thus remains practically immaterial, could have no effect other than the mischievous one of dividing our friends. As yet, whatever it may hereafter become, that question is bad, as the basis of a controversy, and good for nothing at all—a merely pernicious abstraction. We all agree that the seceded States, so-called, are out of their proper practical relation with the Union, and that the sole object of the Government, civil and military, in regard to those States, is to again get them into that proper practical relation. I believe it is not only possible, but in fact easier to do this without deciding, or even considering, whether these States have ever been out of the Union, than with it. Finding themselves safely at home, it would be utterly immaterial whether they had ever been abroad. Let us all join in doing the acts necessary to restoring the proper practical relations between these States and the Union, and each forever after innocently indulge his own opinion whether, in doing the acts, he brought the States from without into the Union, or only gave them proper assistance, they never having been out of it.

The amount of constituency, so to speak, on which the new Louisiana government rests, would be more satisfactory to all if it contained fifty, thirty, or even twenty thousand, instead of only about twelve thousand, as it really does. It is also unsatisfactory to some that the elective franchise is not given to the colored man. I would myself prefer that it were now conferred on the very intelligent, and on those who serve our cause as soldiers. Still the question is not whether the Louisiana government, as it stands, is quite all that is desirable. The question is: "Will it be wiser, take it as it is, and help to improve it, or to reject and disperse it?" "Can Louisiana be brought into proper practical relation with the Union sooner by sustaining or by discarding her new State government?"

Some twelve thousand voters in the heretofore slave State of Louisiana have sworn allegiance to the Union, assumed to be the rightful political power of the State, held elections, organized a State government, adopted a free State constitution, giving the benefit of public schools equally to black and white, and empowering the Legislature to confer the elective franchise upon the colored man. Their Legislature has already voted to ratify the constitutional amendment recently passed by Congress, abolishing slavery throughout the nation. These twelve thousand persons are thus fully committed to the Union, and to perpetual freedom in the State; committed to the very things and nearly all the things the nation wants, and they ask the nation's recognition and its assistance to make good that commitment. Now, if we reject and spurn them, we do our utmost to disorganize and disperse them. We, in effect, say to the white men, "You are worthless, or worse; we will neither help you, nor be helped by you." To the blacks we say, "This cup of Liberty which these, your old masters, hold to your lips, we will dash from you, and leave you to the chances of gathering the spilled and scattered contents in some vague and undefined when, where, and how." If this course, discouraging and paralyzing both white and black, has any tendency to bring Louisiana into proper practical relations with the Union, I have, so far, been unable to perceive it. If, on the contrary, we recognize and sustain the new government of Louisiana, the converse of all this is made true.

We encourage the hearts and nerve the arms of the twelve thousand to adhere to their work and argue for it, and prose-lyte for it, and fight for it, and feed it, and grow it, and ripen it to a complete success. The colored man, too, seeing all united for him, is inspired with vigilance, and energy, and daring to the same end. Grant that he desires the elective franchise, will he not attain it sooner by saving the already advanced steps toward it than by running backward over them? Concede that the new government of Louisiana is only to what it should be as the egg is to the fowl; we shall sooner have the fowl by hatching the egg than by smashing it. Again, if we reject Louisiana, we also reject one vote in favor of the proposed amendment to the National Constitution. To meet this proposition it has been argued that no more than three-fourths of those States which have not attempted secession are necessary to validly ratify the amendment. I do not commit myself against this further than to say that such a ratification would be questionable, and sure to be persistently questioned; whilst a ratification by three-fourths of all the States would be unquestioned and unquestionable.

I repeat the question, "Can Louisiana be brought into proper practical relation with the Union sooner by sustaining or by discarding her new State government?" What has been said of Louisiana will apply generally to other States. And yet so great peculiarities pertain to each State, and such important and sudden changes occur in the same State, and, withal, so new and unprecedented is the whole case, that no exclusive and inflexible plan can safely be prescribed as to details and collaterals. Such exclusive and inflexible plan would surely become a new entanglement. Important principles may, and must, be inflexible.

In the present situation, as the phrase goes, it may be my duty to make some new announcement to the people of the South. I am considering, and shall not fail to act when satisfied that action will be proper.*

PRESIDENT LINCOLN'S SECOND CABINET.

Secretary of State—WILLIAM H. SEWARD, of New York.

Secretary of the Treasury—HUGH McCULLOCH, of Indiana.

Secretary of War—EDWIN M. STANTON, of Ohio.

Secretary of the Navy—GIDEON WELLES, of Connecticut.

Secretary of the Interior—JOHN P. USHER, of Indiana; to be succeeded, May 15, by JAMES HARLAN, of Iowa.

Attorney General—JAMES SPEED, of Kentucky.

Postmaster General—WILLIAM DENNISON, of Ohio.

DEATH OF PRESIDENT LINCOLN.

1865, April 15—President LINCOLN died in Washington city, at twenty-two minutes past seven o'clock, A. M., of wounds inflicted the night before by an assassin, supposed to be John Wilkes Booth.

Same day—ANDREW JOHNSON, Vice President, qualified as President, Chief Justice Chase having administered the oath of office.

Second Rebel Congress--Second Session.

Met in Richmond Monday, November 7, 1864.

JEFFERSON DAVIS'S MESSAGE.

EMPLOYMENT OF SLAVES.

The employment of slaves for service with the army as teamsters or cooks, or in the way of work upon fortifications, or in the Government work shops, or in hospitals, or other similar duties, was authorized by the act of 17th February last, and provision was made for their impressment to a number not exceeding twenty thousand, if it should be found impracticable to obtain them by contract with the owners. The law contemplated the hiring only of the labor of these slaves, and imposed on the Government the liability to pay for the value of such as might be lost to the owners from casualties resulting from their employment in the service.

This act has produced less result than was anticipated, and further provision is required to render it efficacious. But my present purpose is to invite your consideration to the propriety of a radical modification in the theory of the law.

THE LAW ON THE SUBJECT.

Viewed merely as property, and therefore as the subject of impressment, the service or labor of the slave has been frequently claimed for short periods in the construction of defensive works. The slave, however, bears another relation to the State—that of a person. The law of last February contemplates only the relation of the slave to the master, and limits the impressment to a certain term of service. But for the purposes enumerated in the act, instruction in the manner of encamping, marching, and parking trains is needful, so that, even in this limited employment, length of service adds greatly to the value of the negro's labor. Hazard is also encountered in all the positions to which the negroes can be assigned for service with the army, and the duties required of them demand loyalty and zeal.

In this aspect the relation of person predominates so far as to render it doubtful whether the private right of property can consistently and beneficially be continued, and it would seem proper to acquire for the public service the entire property in the labor of the slave, and to pay therefor due compensation, rather than to impress his labor for short terms; and this the more especially as the effect of the present law would vest this entire property in all cases where the slave might be recaptured after compensation for his loss had been paid to the private owner.

Whenever the entire property in the service of a slave is thus acquired by the Government, the question is presented by what tenure he should be held. Should he be retained in servitude, or should his emancipation be held out to him as a reward for faithful service, or should it be granted at once on the promise of such service? and if emancipated, what action should be taken to secure for the freedman the permission of the State from which he was drawn to reside within its limits after the close of his public service? The permission would doubtless be more readily accorded as a reward for past faithful service, and a double motive for zealous discharge of duty would thus be offered to those employed by the Government, their freedom, and the gratification of the local attachment which is so marked a characteristic of the negro, and forms so powerful an incentive to his action.

DAVIS OPPOSED TO IMMEDIATE EMANCIPATION.

The policy of engaging to liberate the negro on his discharge after service faithfully rendered seems to me preferable to that of granting immediate manumission, or that of retaining him in servitude. If this policy should recommend itself to the judgment of Congress, it is suggested that, in addition to the duties heretofore performed by the slave, he might be advantageously employed as pioneer and engineer laborer, and in that event, that the number should be augmented to forty thousand.

A DISTINCTION DRAWN.

Beyond this limit and these employments, it does not seem to me desirable, under existing circumstances, to go. A broad, moral distinction exists between the use of slaves as soldiers in defence of their homes and the incitement of the same persons to insurrection against their masters. The one is justifiable, if necessary; the other is iniquitous and unworthy of a civilized people; and such is the judgment of all writers on public law, as well as that expressed and insisted on by our enemies in all wars prior to that now waged against us. By none have the practices, of which they are now guilty, been denounced with greater severity than by themselves in the two wars with Great Britain in the last and in the present century; and in the Declaration of Independence of 1776, when enumeration was made of the wrongs which justified the revolt from Great Britain, the climax of atrocity was deemed to be reached only when the English monarch was denounced as having "excited domestic insurrection amongst us."

EMPLOYMENT OF SLAVES AS SOLDIERS—DAVIS OPPOSES A GENERAL LAW.

The subject is to be viewed by us, therefore, solely in the light of policy and our social economy. When so regarded, I must dissent from those who advise a general levy and arming of the slaves for the duty of soldiers. Until our white population shall prove insufficient for the armies we require and can afford to have in the field, to employ, as a soldier, the negro who has merely been trained to labor, and as a laborer, the white man, accustomed from his youth to the use of fire-arms, would scarcely be deemed wise or advantageous by any; and this is the question now before us. But should the alternative ever be presented of subjugation or of the employment of the slave as a soldier, there seems no reason to doubt what should then be our decision.

Whether our view embraces what would, in so extreme a case, be the sum of misery entailed by the dominion of the enemy or to be restricted solely to the welfare and happiness of the negro population themselves, the result would be the same. The appalling demoralization, suffering, disease and death which have been caused by partially substituting the invader's system of policy for the kind relation previously subsisting between the master and slave, have been a sufficient demonstration that external interference with our institution of domestic slavery is productive of evil only. If the subject involved no other consideration than the mere right of property, the sacrifices heretofore made by our people have been such as to permit no doubt of their readiness to surrender every possession in order to secure their independence.

REBEL CARE OF THE AFRICAN.

But the social and political question, which is exclusively under the control of the several States, has a far wider and more enduring importance than that of pecuniary interest. In its manifold phase, it embraces the stability of our republican institutions, resting on the actual political equality of all its citizens, and includes the fulfillment of the task which has been so happily begun, that of Christianizing and improving the condition of the Africans who have, by the will of Providence, been placed in our charge. Comparing the results of our own experience with those of the experiments of others, who have borne similar relation to the African race, the people of the several States of the Confederacy have abundant reason to be satisfied with the past, and to use the greatest circumspection in determining their course.

These considerations, however, are rather applicable to the improbable contingency of our need of resorting to this element of resistance than to our present condition. If the recommendation above made, for the training of forty thousand negroes for the service indicated shall meet your approbation, it is certain that even this limited number, by their preparatory training in intermediate duties, would form a more valuable reserve force, in case of urgency, than threefold their number suddenly called from field labor; while a fresh levy could, to a certain extent, supply their places in the special service for which they are now employed.

NEGOTIATIONS FOR PEACE.

The disposition of this government for a peaceful solution of the issues which the enemy has referred to the arbitration of arms has been too often manifested and is too well known to need new assurances. But while it is true that individuals and parties in the United States have indicated a desire to substitute reason for force, and by negotiation to stop the further sacrifice of human life, and to arrest the calamities which now afflict both countries, the authorities who control the government of our enemies have too often and too clearly expressed their resolution to make no peace except on terms of our unconditional submission and degradation, to leave us any hope of the cessation of hostilities until the delusion of their ability to conquer us is dispelled. Among those who are already disposed for peace, many are actuated by principle and by disapproval and abhorrence of the iniquitous warfare that their government is waging, while others are moved by the conviction that it is no longer to the interest of the United States to continue a struggle in which success is unattainable.

Whenever this fast growing conviction shall have taken firm root in the minds of a majority of the Northern people, there will be produced that willingness to negotiate for peace which is now confined to our side. Peace is manifestly impossible unless desired by both parties to this war, and the disposition for it among our enemies will be best and most certainly evoked by the demonstration on our part of ability and unshaken determination to defend our rights, and to hold no earthly price too dear for their purchase. Whenever there shall be, on the part of our enemies, a desire for peace, there will be no difficulty in finding means by which negotiation can be opened; but it is obvious that no agency can be called into action until this desire shall be mutual. When that contingency shall happen, the government, to which is confided the treaty-making power, can be at no loss for means adapted to accomplish so desirable an end.

In the hope that the day will soon be reached when, under Divine favor, these States may be allowed to enter on their former peaceful pursuits, and to develop the abundant natural resources with which they are blessed, let us then resolutely continue to devote our united and unimpaired energies to the defence of our homes, our lives, and our liberties. This is the true path to peace. Let us tread it with confidence in the assured result.

JEFFERSON DAVIS.

CHANGES IN LIST OF SENATORS AND REPRESENTATIVES.

The changes from the list, as found on page 402, are these:

IN SENATE.

Missouri—George G. Vest, appointed by Gov. Reynolds, in place of L. M. Louis.

North Carolina—The Legislature, at its late session, elected Thomas S. Ashe as successor of Mr. Dortch, for the next Congress.

IN HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.*

Tennessee—Henry S. Foote abandoned his seat, came within our lines, and is now in Europe. He was expelled from the House—yeas 73, nays 0.

Alabama—William R. Smith announced his withdrawal, but the next day withdrew it and resumed his seat. Mr. Cobb has died since expulsion. His vacancy has not been filled.

THE NEGRO SOLDIER BILL.†

The following bill passed both Houses:

A Bill to increase the military forces of the Confederate States.

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That in order to provide additional forces to repel invasion, maintain the rightful possession of the Confederate States, secure their independence and preserve their institutions, the President be and he is hereby authorized to ask for and accept from the owners of slaves the services of such number of able-bodied negro men as he may

* A bill passed the Congress postponing the election for Representatives in Missouri for the next Congress until November next!

† General Lee's letter on the subject:

HEADQUARTERS C. S. ARMIES, February 18.

Hon. E. BARKSDALE, House of Representatives, Richmond:
SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 12th instant, with reference to the employment of negroes as soldiers. I think the measure not only expedient but necessary. The enemy will certainly use them against us, if he can get possession of them; and, as his present numerical superiority will enable him to penetrate many parts of the country, I cannot see the wisdom of the policy of holding them to await his arrival, when we may, by timely action and judicious management, use them to arrest his progress. I do not think that our white population can supply the necessities of a long war, without overtaxing its capacity, and imposing great suffering on our people; and I believe that we should provide for a protracted struggle, not merely for a battle or a campaign. In answer to your second question, I can only say that, in my opinion, the negroes, under proper circumstances, will make efficient soldiers. I think we could at least do as well with them as the enemy, and he attaches great importance to their assistance. Under good officers and good instruction I do not see why they should not become soldiers. They possess all the physical qualification, and their habits of obedience constitute a good foundation for discipline. They furnish more promising material than many armies of which we read in history, which owed their efficiency to discipline alone. I think those who are employed should be freed. It would be neither just nor wise, in my opinion, to require them to remain as slaves. The best course to pursue, it seems to me, would be to call for such as are willing to come with the consent of their owners. An impressment or draft would not be likely to bring out the best class, and this course would make the war more distasteful to them and their owners. I have no doubt that, if Congress would authorize their reception into the service, and empower the President to call upon individuals or States for such as they are willing to contribute, with the condition of emancipation to all enrolled, a sufficient number would be forthcoming to enable us to try the experiment. If it prove successful, most of the objections to the measure would disappear; and if individuals still remained unwilling to send their negroes to the army, the force of public opinion in the States would soon bring about such legislation as would remove all obstacles. I think the matter should be left as far as possible to the people and to the States, which alone can legislate, as the necessities of this particular service may require. As to the mode of organizing them, it should be left as free from restraint as possible. Experience will suggest the best course, and it would be inexpedient to frame the subject with provisions that might, in the end, prevent the adoption of reforms suggested by actual trial.

With great respect, your obedient servant,

deem expedient for and during the war, to perform military service in whatever capacity he may direct.

Sec. 2. That the General-in-Chief be authorized to organize the said slaves into companies, battalions, regiments, and brigades, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe, and to be commanded by such officers as the President may appoint.

Sec. 3. That, while employed in the service, the said troops shall receive the same rations, clothing, and compensation as are allowed to other troops in the same branch of the service.

Sec. 4. That if, under the previous section of this act, the President shall not be able to raise a sufficient number of troops to prosecute the war successfully and maintain the sovereignty of the States, and the independence of the Confederate States, then he is hereby authorized to call on each State, whenever he thinks it expedient, for her quota of 300,000 troops, in addition to those subject to military service under existing laws, or so many thereof as the President may deem necessary, to be raised from such classes of the population, irrespective of color, in each State, as the proper authorities thereof may determine: Provided, That not more than 25 per cent. of the male slaves between the ages of 18 and 45 in any State shall be called for under the provisions of this act.

Sec. 5. That nothing in this act shall be construed to authorize a change in the relation of the said slaves.

In Senate† the vote was:

YEAS—Messrs. Brown, Burnett, Caperton, Henry, Hunter, Oldham, Semmes, Simms, Watson—9.

NAYS—Messrs. Barnwell, Graham, Johnson of Georgia, Johnson of Missouri, Maxwell, Orr, Vest, Wigfall—8.

The proviso to the fourth section was added in the Senate. On concurring in it, the vote in the House was—yeas 40, nays 28, as follows:

AYES—Messrs. Anderson, Barksdale, Batson, Baylor, Blandford, Bradley, H. W. NAYS—Messrs. Brown, Burnett, Haynes, Henry, Oldham, Semmes, Simms, Vest, Walker, Watson—10.

Subsequently, the Legislature of Virginia instructed their Senators to support it, which they obeyed. February 25—The Senate of Virginia passed this bill, which is presumed to have become a law:

1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly, That the Governor of this Commonwealth be and he is hereby authorized and empowered to call for volunteers from among the slaves and free negroes of the State to aid in defence of the capital and such other points as are or may be threatened by the public enemy.

2. That it shall be the duty of the Governor to cause all slaves who may volunteer with the consent of their masters, and all free negroes who shall tender their services, to be organized into infantry companies, of not less than sixty-four, rank and file, under white officers to be appointed by himself, and shall place the same, as fast as so organized, at the disposal of the General-in-Chief of the Confederate armies; or he may order all such volunteers to report immediately to the General-in-Chief, to be organized and officered by him, if thereby time can be saved, and the interests of the service promoted.

3. All laws and parts of laws now in force prohibiting the carrying of arms by slaves or free negroes are hereby suspended, during their terms of service, in favor of such volunteers as may be called to the field under this act.

4. The forces raised and organized under this act shall be enlisted for one year from the date of being mustered into the service of the Confederate States.

5. This act shall be in force from its passage.

The following is the vote:

AYES—Messrs. Alderson, Armstrong, Brannon, Branch, Christian of Augusta, Coghill, Collier, Douglas, Frazier, Garnett, Graham, Hart, Hunter, Jones, Keen, Lewis, Logan, Newton, Newman of Mason, Quesaberry, Stevenson, Spiller, Tayloe, Taylor, Thomas, Wiley, Witten—27.

BILL ON EXEMPTIONS AND DETAILS.

A Bill to diminish the number of exemptions and details. The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That so much of the "Act to organize forces to serve during the war," approved February 17, 1864, as exempts one person as overseer or agriculturist on each farm or plantation upon which there were, at specified times, fifteen able-bodied field hands, between the ages of sixteen and fifty, upon certain conditions, is hereby repealed; Provided, that exemptions of persons over forty-five years of age may be granted under the provisions of the act aforesaid; and said persons shall be liable to military service upon the expiration of the time for which they received exemption by reason of having executed bonds for one year from the date thereof.*

Sec. 2. No exemption or detail shall be granted by the President or Secretary of War by virtue of said act, except of persons lawfully reported by a board of surgeons as unable to perform active service in the field; persons over the age of forty years, and of laborers, artisans, mechanics, and persons of scientific skill employed by or working for the Confederate or State Governments, and shown by proper testimony to be such laborers, artisans, mechanics, or persons of scientific skill, and with the same exceptions all exemptions and details heretofore granted by the President or Secretary of War, by virtue of said act, are hereby revoked.

Sec. 3. That all skilled artisans and mechanics who are engaged in the employment of the government of the Confederate States, are hereby exempt from all military service during the time they are so employed; Provided, they are persons whose services, labor, or skill may be more usefully employed for the public good at home than in the field, to be determined by the Secretary of War, on the sworn testimony of disinterested witnesses, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe; and the names of all persons so exempted or detailed, together with the reason for the detail, shall be submitted to Congress at the beginning of each session.

DAVIS'S VETO.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the Confederate States of America:

I have now under consideration the act entitled "An act to diminish the number of exemptions and details," which has passed both Houses, and presented to me Saturday, the 11th instant.

The act contains two provisions, which would, in practice, so impair the efficiency of the service as to counterbalance, if not outweigh the advantages that would result from the other clauses contained in it.

The third section exempts all skilled artisans and mechanics in the employ of the Government from all military service. A very important and indeed indispensable portion of our local defence troops consists of these mechanics and artisans. They amount to many thousands in the Confederacy; and while they are and should remain exempt from general service, no good cause is perceived why they should not, like all good citizens capable of bearing arms, be organized for local defence, and be ready to defend the localities in which they are respectively employed against sudden raids and incursions. If exempt from this local service, it will be necessary to detach, in many cases, troops

* February 23—This message was received in the House: I herewith transmit for your information a communication from the Secretary of War relative to the accessions to the army from each State since April 16, 1864, to the number of persons liable to conscription who have been exempted or detailed, and to the number of those between the ages of seventeen and forty-five, and not unfitted for active service in the field, who are employed in the several States in the manner indicated in your inquiry.

JEFFERSON DAVIS.

The message and accompanying documents were laid upon the table and ordered to be printed. The message states that the

Deserters returned to the army.....	21,056

from the armies in the field. It is believed that if this provision becomes a law, the gain of strength resulting from the repeal of other exemptions enacted by the first sections of the law would be more than counterbalanced by the loss of this local force.

The second provision to which I refer is that which re-voles all details and exemptions heretofore granted by the President and Secretary of War, and prohibits the grant of such exemptions and details hereafter. There is little hazard in saying that such a provision could not be executed without so disorganizing the public service as to produce very injurious results. In every department of the Government, in every branch of the service throughout the country, there are duties to be performed which cannot be discharged except by men instructed and trained in their performance. Long experience makes them experts. Their services become in their peculiar sphere of duty worth to the country greatly more than any they could possibly render in the field. Some of them it would be impossible to immediately replace. The Treasury expert who detects a forged note at a glance, the accounting officer whose long experience makes him a living repository of the rules and the precedents which guard the treasury from frauds, the superintendents of the manufacturing establishments of the Government which supply shoes, wagons, harness, ambulances, &c., for the army; the employees who have been especially trained in the distribution and subdivision of mail matter among the various routes by which it is to reach its destination, are among the daily instances which are recorded in the experience of executive officers. To withdraw from the public service at once, and without any means of replacing them, the very limited number of experts—believed to be less than one hundred—who are affected by this bill, is to throw the whole machinery of Government into confusion and disorder at a period when none who are not engaged in executive duties can have an adequate idea of the difficulties by which they are already embarrassed.

The desire of the Executive and Secretary of War to obtain for the army the services of every man available for the public defence can hardly be doubted, and Congress may be assured that nothing but imperative necessity could induce the exercise of any discretion invested in them to retain men out of the army. But no government can be administered without vesting some discretion in the executive officers in the application of general rules to classes of the population. Individual exceptions exist to all such rules; these exceptions cannot be provided for by legislation in advance. I earnestly hope that Congress will pass an amendment to this act now under consideration in accordance with the foregoing recommendation, so that I may be able, by signing both the act and amendment, to secure unimpaired benefit to the proposed legislation.

JEFFERSON DAVIS.

EXECUTIVE OFFICE, RICHMOND, March 13, 1865.

I am not aware that this conflict of opinion between the Congress and the Executive was reconciled.

SEQUESTRATION.

1864, December 3—The House considered this bill:

A Bill to be entitled an act to provide for sequestering of the property of persons liable to military service, who have departed, or shall depart, from the Confederate States without permission.

SEC. 1. The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact. That if any person shall voluntarily depart from the Confederate States without the permission of the President or of the general officer commanding the Trans-Mississippi department, or of an officer by one of them authorized to grant such permission, and if such person, at the time of such departure, shall be liable to military service, according to the laws of the Confederate States, he shall, from the time of his departure, be treated for the purposes of this act as an alien enemy, and his property shall be liable to sequestration and sale in like manner as the property of other alien enemies. But all proceedings for the sequestration and sale of his property shall cease, and he shall cease to be treated as an alien enemy by reason of such departure, if, during the present war, and before a decree of sequestration shall be pronounced against his property, he shall return and enter upon the performance of military service according to law. But this act shall not apply to persons who at the time of their departure shall bona fide reside within the line of the enemy, or in a part of the Confederacy in the military occupation of the enemy.

SEC. 2. If any person to whom the preceding section applies shall voluntarily, and without such permission, go within the military lines of the enemy, and remain there more than sixty days, he shall be presumed to have departed from the Confederate States within the meaning of this act.

SEC. 3. If any person has heretofore voluntarily, and without such permission, departed from the Confederate States, or gone within the military lines of the enemy for the purpose of avoiding military service, being at the time liable to military service according to law, or being now liable to military service according to law, such person shall be also treated as an alien enemy, and his property shall be liable to sequestration and sale, according to all the preceding provisions, unless such person shall return and enter upon military service according to law, within six months after the passage of this act.

SEC. 4. All grants, conveyances, sales, gifts, and transfers of property hereafter made by any person who shall be liable to military service at the time of making the same, and whose property shall become liable to sequestration under this act, and all liens and incumbrances hereafter created on this property, when he is liable to military service, shall be void as against the claim of sequestration.

It was repeatedly considered and debated, before being passed.

1865, February 15—The Senate passed the bill—yeas 12, nays 7, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Baker, Brown, Burnett, Caperton, Portch, Garland, Henry, Hill, Johnson of Missouri, Simms, Vest, Wigfall—12.

NAYS—Messrs. Graham, Haynes, Maxwell, Oldham, Semmes, Walker, Watson—7.

THE TAX LAW OF 1865.

[From the Richmond Sentinel, March 13.]

We publish in another column the text of the new tax law. It will be acceptable to the reader to have a synopsis of its provisions presented in plainer phrase. We are indebted for the following to a gentleman who had an active part in the passage of the law. The tax law of the present session imposes for the year 1865 taxes as follows:

1. Upon the value of all property, real and personal, not expressly exempted or taxed at a different rate, eight per cent. The property to be assessed on the basis of the market value of the same or similar property in the neighborhood where assessed in the year 1860. The property and assets of corporations, associations, and joint-stock companies, whether incorporated or not, taxed in the same manner and to the same extent as the property and assets of individuals, to be paid by the corporations or joint-stock companies. Banks not to be taxed on deposits of money to the credit of and subject to the checks of others. Stocks or shares in corporations, associations, or joint-stock companies not to be taxed as property, but the dividends to be taxed as income.

2. Upon the amount of all gold and silver coin, and upon the amount of all moneys held abroad, or bills of exchange drawn therefor, promissory notes, rights, credits, and securities, payable in foreign countries, and upon the specie value of all gold dust, or gold and silver bullion, twenty per cent.

3. Upon the amount of all moneys, except those abroad, bank bills, treasury notes, and other paper issued as currency, on hand or on deposit on the day of the approval of the act, five per cent.

4. Upon the amount of all solvent credits, except those held abroad, five per cent. Bonds and stocks issued by the Confederate States, or any State, and all loans to the Government of the Confederate States, are exempted from taxation, except as to the interest thereon, which is taxed as income. This income tax does not apply to bonds or stocks exempted by law from taxation.

5. Upon profits made by buying or selling merchandise, effects, or property of any description, or money, gold or silver, stocks, credits, or obligations of any kind, at any time between January 1, 1865, and January 1, 1866, ten per cent. in addition to the tax on such profits as income. The profits to be ascertained by the difference between the price paid in Confederate treasury notes, including all costs and charges, and the price realized in the same currency. If the objects of the sale were purchased at any time since January 1, 1863, this additional tax to attach on the profits realized on the sale therefore in 1865.

6. Upon the amount of profits exceeding twenty-five per cent., made during the year 1865, by any bank or banking company, insurance or other joint-stock company, a tax of twenty-five per cent. This tax to apply to individuals or partnerships, as well as to corporations—individuals and partnerships that have not been assessed, or have not paid for the year 1864, the tax of twenty-five per cent. imposed on the excess of profits over twenty-five per cent. for that year, to pay the same in 1865.

7. The property, income, and moneys of hospitals, asylums, churches, schools, colleges, and charitable institutions are exempted from taxation so long as it remains within such lines; but income derived therefrom is taxed as income under existing laws.

8. The following are exempted from taxation: Property of each head of a family to the value of five hundred dollars; for each minor child one hundred dollars; for each son in the army or navy, or who has died in the service, five hundred dollars. The property of every soldier, of a soldier's widow, or orphan family or minors, to the value of one thousand dollars. Said exemptions not to apply where the property, exclusive of household furniture, exceeds one thousand dollars in value. Household furniture, where the value does not exceed three hundred dollars on the basis of the value of 1860, wearing apparel, goods manufactured by any person for the use and consumption of his family, including slaves, poultry, fruit, and products raised for the family of the producer, and not for sale; corn, bacon, and other agricultural products which were produced in 1864, and necessary for the taxpayer's family, including his slaves during the present year, and in his possession on the day of his approval of the act, are exempted from taxation.

9. Taxes on property for the year 1865 are to be assessed as on the day of the passage of this act, and to be due and collected on the 1st of June next, or as soon thereafter as practicable. The additional taxes on profits for 1865 to be assessed and collected according to the provisions of existing laws. All the taxes imposed by this act, as well as the taxes on incomes and profits, and the specific taxes, and taxes on sales, of the existing laws, are to be paid in Confederate treasury notes, or in certificates of indebtedness; provided that at least one-half be paid in the notes.

10. Any tax payer allowed, under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, to pay his taxes in advance.

11. The provision of the act of the 17th of February, 1864, which allowed the assessed tax on property employed in agriculture to be credited by the tax in kind, is repealed; that where income from property was taxed the property itself should be exempted, is also repealed.

12. The Secretary of the Treasury, on the recommendation of the boards of police, county courts, or other county, district, or parish tribunals, is authorized to suspend the collection of taxes in those districts where depredations have been committed by the enemy, in cases of individuals whose resources have been so seriously damaged or destroyed as to render the payment of taxes impossible or oppressive. To all the taxes above specified an addition of one-eighth of the amount is made, in each case to be paid in treasury notes and applied to the payment of the increased compensation of the soldier.

The taxes for 1865 may, therefore, be summed up as follows:

On all property (except foreign credits, coin, &c.,) eight per cent. on the valuation of 1860. On coin and foreign credits twenty per cent., and on bullion, plate, jewelry, &c., ten per cent.

One-tenth of all the productions of the soil, as established by the present law of tax in kind. On the income from property not employed in agriculture, the rates prescribed by the existing laws. No abatement of the property tax in the case of agriculturists because of the tithe tax, and no abatement in the case of other property holders because of the income tax. Agriculturists to pay no income tax.

Five per cent. on all solvent credits, bonds, and stocks. The bonds of States, and the bonds, stocks, and loans to the Confederate States, to be taxed upon the interest as income and not upon principal. Ten per cent. additional to income tax on profits made by dealing in property, money, bonds, stocks, &c., in 1865 or in 1864, which are not already paid. Twenty-five per cent. on property exceeding twenty-five per cent. made in 1865 by banks, corporations, individuals, or partnerships, &c., to be paid in like manner.

This tax to be collected also for 1864 of those who may not have paid the same.

An addition of one-eighth in every case, except that of tax in kind, to be applied to paying the soldiers.

The person who is liable for the taxes and responsible for their payment is the one who holds or owns the property on the day of the passage of the act.

BILL TO DEFINE AND PUNISH CONSPIRACY AGAINST THE CONFEDERATE STATES.

1864, December 15—The Senate passed the following bill:

A Bill to define and punish conspiracy against the Confederate States.

SECTION 1. The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That if two or more persons within any State or Territory of the Confederate States shall, with intent to injure the Confederate States, conspire to subvert, overturn or destroy by force the Government of the Confederate States; or to oppose by force the execution of the laws of the Confederate States, or by force to hinder, delay or prevent the execution of any law of the Confederate States, or to seize, take, possess or destroy any property of the Confederate States, against its consent, or to prevent, delay or hinder, by force or fraud, the transportation of supplies of men to, or belonging to the army of the Confederate States, or to destroy or injure any road, boat, engine or work employed in such transportation, or to hold any secret communication or intercourse with an enemy of the Confederate States, or to aid or abet the enemy in his war upon the Confederate States, or persons in rebellion against the same, or to promote disobedience of lawful military orders, mutiny or desertion, or unauthorized absence in the army of the Confederate States or among the soldiers in the military service, each and every person so offending shall be guilty of a high crime, and, upon conviction thereof, shall be punished by fine not exceeding five thousand dollars, and shall be imprisoned, with or without labor, not exceeding five years: Provided, That any person charged with any offence mentioned in this act, if such person be in the military or naval service of the Confederate States, may be tried by a military court or court martial, and if found guilty shall be punished by fine and imprisonment as hereinbefore provided, or such other punishment, not capital, as the court shall adjudge; and if the person charged be not in the military or naval service as aforesaid, such person shall be tried in the District Court of the Confederate States for the proper district.

Yeas 10, nays 6, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Baker, Barnwell, Caperton, Dortch, Garland, Henry, Hill, Johnson of Mo., Semmes, Sparrow—10.

NAYS—Messrs. Graham, Hunter, Johnson of Ga., Maxwell, Orr, Watson—6.

When Mr. Hunter's name was called, he stated that he believed Congress had the right to pass the bill; but, like the gentleman from Florida, he did not see that there was any necessity for it. He therefore voted against it.

The bill is as it came from the House, with the exception of the proviso added, as recommended by the Senate Judiciary Committee. The House is supposed to have concurred, and the bill to have become a law.

PEACE AND INDEPENDENCE.

Additional to what is stated on pages 456 and 457, are the following facts:

RESOLUTION ON INDEPENDENCE.

IN SENATE.

1864, December 13—On motion of Mr. BARNWELL, a joint resolution defining the position of the Confederate States, and declaring the determination of the Congress and the people thereof to prosecute the war till their independence is acknowledged, was taken up and adopted by an unanimous vote—yeas 16, nays none.

IN HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

1865, January 13—The resolution was reported favorably from the Committee on Foreign Relations, with a verbal amendment. Mr. HENRY said he preferred the original language of the resolutions; if he recollected aright, it was the language of the Declaration of Independence. Mr. SEMMES said that was the objection to it. Mr. HENRY said that was no objection; the Declaration of Independence was a very good document. The amendment was concurred in, and the resolutions passed.

RESOLUTIONS CONCERNING PEACE.

December 16—Mr. TURNER, (N. C.), under a suspension of the rules, introduced resolutions that the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, be and he is hereby requested to appoint thirteen commissioners, one from each of the States of the Confederate States, to tender propositions for a conference, in order to negotiate terms of peace, and failing in this, said commissioners shall use all their influence to secure an exchange of prisoners and to mitigate the horrors of the existing war.

Mr. BARKSDALE, (Miss.,) offered the following resolution as a substitute for those presented by the gentleman from North Carolina:

Whereas, the people of the Confederate States having been compelled, by the acts of the non-slaveholding States, to dissolve their connection with those States, and to form a new compact in order to preserve their liberties; and whereas, the efforts made by the Government of the Confederate States, immediately upon its organization, to establish friendly relations between it and the Government of the United States having proved unavailing by reason of the refusal of the Government of the United States to hold intercourse with the Commissioners appointed by this Government for that purpose; and whereas, the Government of the United States having since repeatedly refused to listen to propositions for an honorable peace, and having declared to foreign powers in advance that it would reject any offer of mediation which they might be prompted to make in the interest of humanity for terminating the war; and thus, having manifested their determination to continue it, with a view to the reduction of the people of these States to a degrading bondage, or to their extermination: therefore, be it

Resolved, That while we reiterate our readiness to enter upon negotiations for peace whenever the hearts of our enemies are so inclined, we will pursue without faltering the course we have deliberately chosen, and for the preservation of our liberties will employ whatever means Providence has placed at our disposal.

Resolved, That the mode prescribed in the Constitution of the Confederate States for making treaties of peace afford ample means for the attainment of that end, whenever the Government of the United States abandon their wicked purpose to subjugate them, and evince a willingness to enter upon negotiations for terminating the war.

Pending which, the morning hour having expired, the subject was postponed.

December 17—Mr. McMULLEN, of Virginia, offered this substitute:

Whereas, according to the Declaration of Independence of the United States, and the Constitution of the Confederate States, the people of each of said States, in their highest sovereign capacity, have a right to alter, amend, or abolish the government under which they live, and establish such other as they may deem most expedient; and whereas, the people of the several Confederate States have thought proper to sever their political connection with the people and government of the United States, for reasons which it is not needful here to state; and whereas, the people of the Confederate States have organized and established a distinct government for themselves; and whereas, because the people of the Confederate States have thus exercised their undoubted right in this respect, the people and government of the United States have thought proper to make war upon them; and whereas, there seems to be a difference of opinion on the part of the respective governments and people as to which of the contending parties is responsible for the commencement of the present war; therefore,

Resolved, That while it is inexpedient, and would be incompatible with the dignity of the Confederate States to send commissioners to Washington city for the purpose of securing a cessation of hostilities, yet it would be, in the judgment of this body, eminently proper that the House of Representatives of the Confederate States should despatch without delay to some convenient point a body of commissioners, thirteen in number, composed of one representative from each of the said States, to meet and confer with such individuals as may be appointed by the government of the United States in regard to all outstanding questions of difference between the two governments, and to agree, if possible, upon terms of a lasting and honorable peace, subject to the ratification of the respective governments and of the sovereign States respectively represented therein.

1865, January 11—Mr. MILES, of South Carolina, introduced a series, of which these are a part:

Resolved, That under the Constitution Congress alone has the right to declare war, and the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make a treaty of peace.

Resolved, That all attempts to make peace with the United States by the action or intervention of the separate States composing the Confederacy are unauthorized by the Constitution, in contravention of the supreme law of the land, and therefore revolutionary.

Resolved, That we, the representatives of the Confederate States, are firmly determined to continue the struggle in which we are involved until the United States shall acknowledge our independence; and to this determination, with a sincere conviction of the justice of our cause, and an humble reliance upon the Supreme Ruler of nations, we do solemnly and faithfully pledge ourselves.

1865, January 23—Mr. J. T. LEACH, of North Carolina, offered these resolutions:

Whereas, the protracted struggle on the part of the Confederate States for their constitutional rights against the federal government, who claims the exercise of rights over States and the property of the citizens not guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States nor the laws of Congress is a just cause of alarm to the friends of civil liberty; and

Whereas, the cruel manner in which the war has been conducted on the part of the federal authorities, in the destruction of the private property of non-combatants and other acts of wantonness not tolerated by the usages of civilized nations, justifies the painful apprehension that the federal authorities are blind to their constitutional obligations, deaf to the demands of justice, the appeals of suffering humanity, the groans of the dying, the cries of hapless mothers and weeping orphans:

Resolved, therefore, For the purpose of averting, if possible, further horrors of this bloody, fratricidal strife, revolting alike to the feelings of statesmen, patriots, and Christians, and to all moral or our physical strength, that we, members of the House of Representatives of the Confederate Congress, in behalf of justice and suffering humanity, appeal most earnestly to the President and the Senators of the Confederate Congress to appoint such number of commissioners as, in their judgment, the importance of the occasion demands, to offer an armistice to the federal authorities, preparatory to negotiations for peace.

Resolved, That should the federal authorities agree to an armistice, and consent to negotiate for peace, the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, be requested to appoint commissioners for the purpose of conferring with the federal authorities, and that such terms of peace as may be agreed to by them and certified by the President and Senate—two-thirds of the Senate concurring—shall constitute a bond of peace between the belligerents.

Resolved, That should the federal authorities refuse to entertain terms of peace, by negotiation, and thereby deny us our constitutional rights, for the purpose of more effectually maintaining those rights, and at the same time avert, if possible, the fearful and humiliating fate of subjugation, alike revolting to the feelings of freemen and repugnant to the demands of justice, that we, the representatives of this House, do unanimously pledge the undivided resources of the Confederate States in defence of our inalienable rights as freemen.

Mr. McMULLEN, of Va., moved that the resolutions be considered in secret session, as the same question was now before the House in another form.

Mr. ATKINS, of Tenn., moved that the resolutions be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, which was ordered by an almost unanimous vote.

IN SENATE.

Mr. HENRY, of Tennessee, offered these resolutions, which were taken up November 29, and after debate referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Resolved by the Congress of the Confederate States of America, That the people of the Confederate States are endowed by their Creator with the inalienable rights of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness; that to secure these rights governments were instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed; and whenever any government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the right of the people to alter or abolish it, and to institute a new government, laying its foundation on such principles, and organizing its powers in such form, as to them shall seem most likely to effect their safety and happiness; that on these principles, embodied in the Declaration of American Independence, the United Colonies, in 1776, dissolved the connection that bound them to the Government of Great Britain, and on them the Confederate States have severed the bonds of that political union which connected them with the people of the government of the United States of America, rather than submit to the repeated injuries inflicted upon them by that people, and to the usurpations of that government, all of which had the direct object to deprive them of their rights, rob them of their property, secured to them by constitutional guaranty, and to establish an absolute tyranny over these States.

Resolved, That the Confederate States appealed to arms in defence of these rights and to establish these principles only after they had in vain conjured the people of the government of the United States, by all the ties of a common kindred, to discontinuance and discontinuance these injuries and usurpations, and after they had petitioned for redress, in the most appropriate terms, and received in answer only a repetition of insults and injuries, which foreshadowed usurpations still more dangerous to liberty.

Resolved, That, after nearly four years of cruel, devastating, and unnatural war, in which the people of the Confederate States have unquestionably established their capacity for self-government, and their ability to resist the attempts of the enemy to subjugate them, this Congress does not hesitate to avow its sincere desire for peace, and to that end proclaim to the world the readiness of the government of the Confederate States to open negotiations to establish a permanent and honorable peace between the Confederate States and the United States, upon the basis of the separate independence of the former.

Resolved, That the time has come when the Confederate Congress, in the name of the people of the Confederate States, deem it proper again to proclaim to the world their unalterable determination to be free; and that they do not abate one jot of their high resolve to die freemen rather than live slaves; and, further, if the people of the United States, by re-electing Abraham Lincoln, mean to tender to them four years more of war or re-union with them on any terms, deeply deprecating the dire necessity so wantonly thrust upon them, and relying upon the justice of their cause and the gallantry of their soldiers, they accept the gage of battle, and leave the result to the righteous arbitrament of Heaven.

Resolved, That in view of the determination of the enemy to prosecute this horrid war still further, against which the Confederate States have at all times protested, and which the enemy have waged with extraordinary vigor, and which has been marked by acts of extraordinary atrocity, in violation of all the usages of civilized warfare, the Congress of the Confederate States will from this hour dedicate themselves anew to the great cause of self-defence against the combined tyranny of the enemy; that it shall no longer be the momentary occupation of the Congress and the people of the Confederate States, but the business of their lives, to gather together the entire strength of the country in men and material of war, and put it forth, as with the will of one man, and with an unquiverable determination to defend their altars and their firesides till the last votary of freedom falls around them.

Mr. HENRY did not desire to discuss the resolutions at this time. He merely wished to have them printed and placed upon the calendar. At the proper time he trusted that Senators would express their sentiments on this question, and a spirit would go out to the country that we are fully up to the mark, and intend to achieve our independence or die in the good fight.

January 30—Mr. OLDHAM (Texas) offered a series of resolutions, passed by the Legislature of Texas, declaring the determination of that State to accept no terms of peace which did not guarantee the independence of the Confederacy. Mr. OLDHAM said that he offered these resolutions, passed by the Legislature of his State, with peculiar satisfaction and pleasure. He referred briefly to the course pursued by one State since the commencement of this war. Her sons did not wait for the enemy to invade her borders; but when the tocsin of war was first sounded they rushed to the defence of glorious Old Virginia, and they were always to be found where the battle raged the fiercest. He alluded to the peace propositions, and to the call for a convention of States. He believed a convention of the States impracticable at this time. A majority of the States would not send delegates to such a convention. His State had spoken out; she wanted no peace which did not bring independence with it. We Texans, who had been for four years battling for our liberties, would be satisfied with nothing short of independence. He did not question the patriotism of those who believed in any other association than that prescribed by the Constitution. We must keep our people united; that was the sure road to peace and independence. He did not deny that our people were depressed, but it was caused by the dispelling of the illusions of peace, by the triumphant march of Sherman through Georgia, and his capture of the city of Savannah.

Mr. BROWN said that nothing had fallen so gratefully upon his ears as the heroic resolutions passed by the Legislature of the heroic State of Texas. He did not believe that we could get honesty and fair dealing from the Yankees until we had thrashed it into them. In his opinion we would have peace when we conquered it at the point of the bayonet and the mouth of the cannon.

Mr. WIGFALL was at the seat of government of his State when these resolutions were introduced, and he informed the Senate that they expressed the sentiment of his people. The resolutions were ordered to be printed.

JEFFERSON DAVIS ON STATE NEGOTIATION FOR PEACE.

RICHMOND, VA., November 17, 1864.

To the Hon. Senators of Georgia—Messrs. A. R. Wright, (President Senate,) Y. L. Guerry, J. M. Chambers, Thomas E. Lloyd, Frederick K. West, Robert B. Nesbit:

GENTLEMEN: I answered by telegraph this morning your letter of the 11th inst., as requested, and now respectfully comply with your desire that I should express my views on the subject to which you invite my attention.

In forwarding to me the resolutions introduced into the House of Representatives of Georgia by Mr. Stephens, of Hancock, you state that you are not inclined to favor the passage of these or any similar resolutions, believing them to have a tendency to create divisions among ourselves, and to unite and strengthen our enemies, but that it is asserted in Milledgeville that I favor such action on the part of the States, and would be pleased to see Georgia cast her influence in that way. You are kind enough to say that if this be true, and if the passage of these or similar resolutions would in the slightest degree aid or assist me in bringing the war to a successful and speedy close, you will give them your earnest and hearty support.

I return, with my cordial thanks for this expression of confidence, but assure you that there is no truth in the assertions which you mention, and I presume that you will already have seen by the closing part of my annual message, which must have reached you since the date of your letter, that I have not contemplated the use of any other agency in treating for peace than that established by the Constitution of the Confederate States.

That agency seems to me to be well adapted to its purpose, and free from the injurious consequences that would follow any other means that have been suggested.

The objection to separate State action which you present in your letter, appears to be so conclusive as to admit no reply. The immediate and inevitable tendency of such distinct action in each State is to create discordant instead of united counsels, to suggest to our enemies the possibility of a dissolution of the Confederacy, and to encourage them, by the spectacle of our divisions, to more determined action against us.

They would readily adopt the false idea that some of the States of the Confederacy are disposed to abandon their ster States and make separate terms of peace for themselves, and if such a suspicion, however unfounded, were once engendered among our own people, it would be destructive of that spirit of mutual confidence and support which forms our chief reliance for success in the maintenance of our cause.

When the proposal of separate State action was first mooted, it appeared to me so impracticable, so void of any promise of good, that I gave no heed to the proposal; but upon its adoption by citizens, whose position and ability give weight to the expression of their opinions, I was led to a serious consideration of the subject. My first impressions have not been changed by reflection.

If all the States of the two hostile Federations are to meet in Convention, it is plain that such a meeting can only take place after an agreement as to the time, place, and terms on which they are to meet. Now, without discussing the minor although not trifling difficulties of agreeing as to time and place, it is certain that the States would never consent to a Convention without a previous agreement as to the terms on which they were to meet.

The proposed Convention must meet on the basis either that no State should, against its own will, be bound by the decision of the Convention, or that it should be so bound. But it is plain that an agreement on the basis that no State should be bound, without its consent, by the result of the deliberations, would be an abandonment on the part of the North of the pretended right of coercion; would be an absolute recognition of the independence of the several States of the Confederacy; would be, in a word, so complete a concession of the rightfulness of our cause that the most visionary cannot hope for such an agreement in advance of the meeting of a Convention.

The only other possible basis of meeting is that each State should agree, beforehand, to be bound by the decision of the Convention, and such agreement is but another form of submission to Northern dominion, as we well know that in such a Convention we should be outnumbered nearly two to one. On the very threshold of the scheme proposed, therefore, we are met by an obstacle which cannot be removed. Is not the impracticable character of the project apparent?

You will observe that I leave entirely out of view the suggestion that a Convention of all the States of both Federations should be held by common consent without any previous understanding as to the effect of its decisions—should meet merely in debate and pass resolutions that are to bind no one. It is not supposed that this can really be the meaning attached to the proposal by those who are active in its support, although the resolutions to which you invite my attention declare that the function of such a Convention would be simply to propose a plan of peace, with the consent of the two belligerents; or, in other words, to act as negotiators in treating for peace.

This part of the scheme is not intelligible to me. If the Convention is only to be held with the consent of the two belligerents, that consent cannot be obtained without negotiation. The plan then would resolve itself into a scheme that the two Governments should negotiate an agreement for the appointment of negotiators to make proposals for a treaty. It seems much more prompt and simple to negotiate for peace at once than to negotiate for the appointment of negotiators, who are to meet without power to do anything but make proposals.

If the Government of the United States is willing to make peace, it will treat for peace directly. If unwilling, it will refuse to consent to the Convention of States. The author of these resolutions and those who concur in his views appear to me to commit the radical error of supposing that the obstacle to obtaining the peace which we all desire consists in the difficulty of finding proper agencies for negotiating, so that the whole scope of the resolutions ends in nothing but suggesting that, if the enemy will treat, the best agency would be State Delegates to a Convention, whereas the whole and only obstacle is that the enemy will not treat at all, or entertain any other proposition than that we should submit to their yoke, acknowledge that we are criminals, and appeal to their mercy for pardon.

After this statement of objections, it may appear superfluous to add others of less gravity; but as you invite a full expression of my views, I will add that history is replete with instances of the interminable difficulties and delays which attend the attempt to negotiate on great and conflicting interests, when the parties to the negotiation are numerous. If this has been the case where the parties possessed full powers to conclude a treaty, what can we hope from an assembly of negotiators from thirty or forty States, who, in the midst of an exasperating warfare, are to meet without power to conclude anything?

In the history of our own country we find that in the time of profound peace, when the most cordial brotherhood of sentiment existed, and when a long and bloody war had been brought to a triumphant close, it required two years to assemble a Convention and bring its deliberations to an end, and another year to procure the ratification of their labors. With such a war as the present in progress, the views of the large assemblage of negotiators proposed would undergo constant change, according to the vicissitude of the struggle, and the attempt to secure concordant views would soon be abandoned, and leave the parties more embittered than ever—less hopeful of the possibility of successful negotiation.

Again, how is the difficulty resulting from the conflicting pretensions of the two belligerents in regard to several of the States to be overcome? Is it supposed that Virginia would enter into a convention with a delegation from what our enemies choose to term the "State" of "West Virginia," and thus recognize an insolent and violent dismemberment of her territory? Or would the United States consent that "West Virginia" should be deprived of her pretensions to equal rights, after having formally admitted her as a State, and allowed her to vote at a Presidential election? Who would send a delegation from Louisiana, Tennessee, Kentucky, Missouri?

The enemy claim to hold the governments of these States, while we assert them to be members of the Confederacy. Would delegates be received from both sides? If so, there would soon be a disruption of the Convention. If delegates are received from neither side, then a number of the States most vitally interested in the result would remain unrepresented, and what value could be attached to the mere representations of a body of negotiators under such circumstances?

Various other considerations suggest themselves, but enough has been said to justify my conclusion that the proposal of separate State action is unwise, impracticable, and offers no prospect of good to counterbalance its manifold injurious consequences to the cause of our country.

Very respectfully, yours, &c.,

JEFFERSON DAVIS.

CONVENTION OF THE STATES.

In December, 1864, Mr. FOOTE of Tennessee, introduced two resolutions looking towards a conference of States. The first declares it unpatriotic for any of the rebel States to withdraw from the Confederacy, but allowable for them to confer in their sovereign capacity on the prosecution of the war and the attainment of peace. The second is as follows:

Resolved, That the present condition of the country is such as to render it eminently desirable that, for the purposes specified, a convention of these States, in their highest sovereign capacity, should be convoked without delay, and that if such convocation should be judged for the present impracticable, it would be desirable that each of said States should, "with as little delay as possible," appoint a limited number of commissioners with power to confer freely and fraternally with each other touching the present condition of the country, and of offering such advisory suggestions to said Confederate Government as might be calculated to prove advantageous in the further prosecution of the existing war, or conducive to the establishment of an early and honorable peace.

These resolutions were laid on the table by a vote of 63 to 13. Those who voted in the negative were:

Messrs. Bell of Georgia, Boyce of South Carolina, Colyar of Tennessee, Cruikshank of Alabama, Foote of Tennessee, Fuller of North Carolina, Gilmer of North Carolina, Lumpkin of Georgia, J. M. Leach of North Carolina, Logan of North Carolina, McMullen of Virginia, Ramsay of North Carolina, Smith of North Carolina.

THE MEXICAN QUESTION.

1864, November 7—Mr. MURRAY, of Tennessee, introduced the following joint resolution:

The Congress of the Confederate States do resolve, That we have no sympathy with the efforts to establish a monarchy in Mexico, and that we will not, directly or indirectly, aid in the establishment of a monarchy on the Continent of America.

Referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

1865, January 30—Mr. DEJARNETTE, of Virginia, offered the following preamble and joint resolution, and the House suspended the five minute rule to allow him to speak to the merits of the resolution :

Whereas all nations have seen with alarm the establishment of any formidable power in their vicinity; and

Whereas the people of the Confederate States, as well as the people of the United States, have ever cherished the resolve that any further acquisition of territory in North America by any foreign power would be inconsistent with their prosperity and development; and

Whereas the invasion of Mexico by France has resulted, as is alleged, in the establishment of a government founded on the consent of the governed; nevertheless, we have reasons to believe that ulterior designs are entertained against California and the Pacific States, which we do not regard as parties to the war now waged against us, as they have furnished neither men nor money for its prosecution: therefore

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do resolve, That the time may not be distant when we will be prepared to unite, on the basis of the independence of the Confederate States, with those most interested in the vindication of the principles of the Monroe doctrine, for their mediation to the exclusion of all seeming violations of those principles on the continent of North America.

Mr. DEJARNETTE said that if England and France saw that we intended to pursue the policy indicated in the resolution, they would give us all we wanted and more than we hoped for.

On motion of Mr. ATKINS, (Tenn.,) the preamble and resolution were referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

DAVIS'S LAST MESSAGE.

Both Houses of the Rebel Congress had agreed to adjourn sine die, March 9th; but Mr. DAVIS requested them to remain in session a few days longer. On the 13th, he sent them a message on the state of the Confederacy, in which allusion is made to the perils surrounding it, and these recommendations are made:

That means be devised for securing to the officers of the supply departments two millions of dollars in coin, to supply the Virginia and North Carolina armies for one year. That the impressment law be modified so as not to allow public officers to impress supplies without making payment of the valuation at the time of impressment. That more efficient revenue measures be passed; that more rigorous military bills be passed, and that a general militia law be enacted. Respecting the suspension of the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus, he used this language:

I have heretofore, in a confidential message to the two Houses, stated the facts which induced me to consider it necessary that the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus should be suspended. The conviction of the necessity of this measure has become deeper, as the events of the struggle have been developed. Congress has not concurred with me in opinion. It is my duty to say that the time has arrived when the suspension of the writ is not simply advisable and expedient, but almost indispensable to the successful conduct of the war. On Congress must rest the responsibility of declining to exercise a power conferred by the Constitution as a means of public safety to be used in periods of national peril resulting from foreign invasion. If our present circumstances are not such as were contemplated when this power was conferred, I confess myself at a loss to imagine any contingency in which this clause of the Constitution will not remain a dead letter.

ON PEACE.

Congress will remember that in the conference above referred to our commissioners were informed that the Government of the United States would not enter into any agreement or treaty whatever with the Confederate States, nor with any single State; and that the only possible mode of obtaining peace was by laying down our arms, disbanding our forces, and yielding unconditional obedience to the laws of the United States, including those passed for the confiscation of our property, and the constitutional amendment for the abolition of slavery. It will further be remembered that Mr. Lincoln declares that the only terms on which hostilities would cease, were those stated in his message of December last, in which we were informed that in the event of our penitent submission, he would temper justice with mercy; and that the question whether we would be governed as dependent territories, or permitted to have a representation in their Congress, was one on which he could promise nothing, but which would be decided by their Congress, after our submission had been accepted.

It has not, however, been hitherto stated to you that in the course of the conference at Fortress Monroe, a suggestion was made by one of our commissioners that the objections entertained by Mr. Lincoln to treating with the Government of the Confederacy or with any separate State might be avoided by substituting for the usual mode of negotiating through commissioners or other diplomatic agents, the method sometimes employed of a military convention to be entered into by the Commanding Generals of the armies of the two belligerents. This, he admitted, was a power possessed by him, though it was not thought commensurate with all the questions involved. As he did not accept the suggestion when made, he was afterwards requested to reconsider his conclusion upon the subject of a suspension of hostilities, which he agreed to do, but said that he had maturely considered of the plan, and had determined that it could not be done.

Subsequently, however, an interview with Gen. Longstreet was asked for by Gen. Ord, commanding the enemy's army of the James, during which Gen. Longstreet was informed by him that there was a possibility of arriving at a satisfactory adjustment of the present unhappy difficulties, by means of a military convention, and that if Gen. Lee desired an interview on the subject, it would not be declined, provided Gen. Lee had authority to act. This communication was supposed to be the consequence of the suggestion above referred to, and Gen. Lee, according to instructions, wrote to Gen. Grant on the 2d of this month, proposing to meet him for conference on the subject, and stating that he was vested with the requisite authority. Gen. Grant's reply stated that he had no authority to accede to the proposed conference; that his powers extended only to making a convention on subjects purely of a military character, and that Gen. Ord could only have meant that an interview would not be refused on any subject of which he, Gen. Grant, had the right to act.

It thus appears that neither with the Confederate authorities, nor the authorities of any State, nor through the Commanding Generals, will the Government of the United States treat or make any terms or agreement whatever for the cessation of hostilities. There remains, then, for us no choice but to continue this contest to a final issue; for the people of the Confederacy can be but little known to him who supposes it possible they would ever consent to purchase, at the cost of degradation and slavery, permission to live in a country garrisoned by their own negroes, and governed by officers sent by the conqueror to rule over them.

WRIT OF HABEAS CORPUS.

1865, January 20—Mr. J. M. LEACH, of N. C., offered the following:

Resolved, That the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus is one of the great bulwarks of freedom, and that it ought not to be suspended except in extreme cases where the public safety imperatively demands it; that the people of this Confederacy are united in a great struggle for liberty, and that no exigency exists justifying its suspension.

The resolution was lost by the following vote:

YEAS—Messrs. Anderson, Bell, Boyce, Branch, Clepton, Colyar, Cruickshank, Darden, Foster, Fuller, Garland, Gilmer, Lumpkin, J. M. Leach, J. T. Leach, Lester, Logan, Marshall, Miles, Murray, Orr, Rumsay, J. M. Smith, W. E. Smith, Turner, Wickham—26.

NAYS—Messrs. Aiken, Baldwin, Barksdale, Batson, Blanford, Baytor, Bradley, H. W. Bruce, Chrisman, Clark, Cluskey, Conrow, DeJarnette, Dupre, Ewing, Farrow, Gaither, Gholson, Goode, Gray, Hanley, Hatcher, Herbert, Hilton, Holder, Johnson, Keeble, Lyon, Machen, Moore, Norton, Perkins, Read, Russell, Sexton, Shewmake, Simpson, Sneed, Staples, Triplett, Villere, Wilkes, Mr. Speaker—43.

On motion of Mr. RUSSELL, of Va., it was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

1864, December 24—The same resolution was negatived—yeas 31, nays 41, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anderson, Atkins, Ayer, Baldwin, Boyce,

Branch, Clopton, Colyar, Cruickshank, Darden, Echols, Farrow, Foster, Gaither, Garland, Hanley, Herbert, Holden, Lumpkin, Lester, Marshall, Menees, Miles, Simpson, J. M. Smith, W. E. Smith, Smith, (Ala.,) Smith, (N. C.,) Wickham, Witherspoon—31.

NAYS—Messrs Aiken, Barksdale, Batson, Blanford, E. M. Bruce, H. W. Bruce, Chilton, Chrisman, Clark, Cluskey, Conrad, Conrow, Dickenson, Dupre, Elliott, Ewing, Funnsten, Gholson, Goode, Hartridge, Hatcher, Holliday, Johnson, Keeble, Konner, Lyon, Machon, Norton, Perkins, Pugh, Sexton, Shewmake, Sneed, Swan, Triplett, Vest, Villere, Welsh, Wilkes, Mr. Speaker—41.

1865, March 15—The House passed a bill—yeas 36, nays 32—suspending the privilege, but the Senate—yeas 6, nays 9—at first refused to concur, but subsequently passed it, as follows:

Whereas the Confederate States are invaded, and the public safety requires a suspension of the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus,

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus is hereby suspended until otherwise provided by law, in all cases of arrest or detention by order of the President, the Secretary of War, or the general officer commanding the Trans-Mississippi Military Department.

Sec. 2. Until otherwise provided by law, the said privilege shall be suspended for sixty days from the time of arrest, in every case of arrest or detention by order of a general officer commanding an army, or a military department or district.

Sec. 3. Every such order shall be in writing, signed by the officer making the same, and shall name or describe the person to be arrested or detained.

Sec. 4. No military officer, detaining a person by virtue of any such order, shall be compelled, in answer to any writ of habeas corpus, to appear in person, or to return the body of the person so detained; but upon his certificate, under oath, that such person is detained by him under such an order, accompanied with a copy of the order, further proceedings under the writ shall cease and remain suspended according to the provisions of the preceding sections.

FINANCIAL.

1865, March 17—A law was enacted "to raise coin for the purpose of furnishing necessary supplies to the army," which imposes a tax of twenty-five per cent. on coin in the hands of individuals or banks in excess of $200, and authorizing in lieu thereof a loan from the banks, to the extent of $2,000,000, if made by the 17th of April. A supplementary act commuted this tax where the owners of coin would exchange it for cotton at the rate of fifteen cents per pound. Before March 28, the State of Virginia advanced $300,000 in coin for the use of the Commissary Department, for which an order was signed by the rebel Secretary of the Treasury for 2,000,000 pounds of cotton, "with the right to export the same free of all conditions except the payment of the (export) duty of seventy-five cents per pound." About that time, William W. Crump, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, was sent to the banks of North and South Carolina and Georgia, to negotiate for their share of the loan. These facts are obtained from official documents found in Richmond, and published recently in the New York and other papers.

GENERAL MILITIA LAW.

The general militia law recommended above is said to have been passed.

CHANGE IN MR. DAVIS'S CABINET.

Secretary of War—John C. Breckinridge appointed, January 6, 1865, in place of James A. Seddon, resigned.

Peace Movements in the States.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Several resolutions on the subject of peace were offered.

In November, 1864, Mr. POOL proposed these in the Senate:

Resolved, That five commissioners be appointed by this General Assembly, to act with Commissioners from the other States of the Confederacy as a medium for negotiating a peace with the United States.

Resolved, That each of the other States of the Confederacy be requested to create a similar commission, with as little delay as practicable, and to co-operate with North Carolina in requesting of President Davis, in the name of these sovereign States, that he tender the United States a condition for negotiating a peace through the medium of these commissioners.

Resolved, That the Governor make known to each of the other States of the Confederacy this action of the General Assembly of North Carolina, and endeavor to secure their co-operation.

Resolved, That whenever any five States shall have responded by the appointment of commissioners, the Governor shall communicate the proceeding officially to President Davis, and request his prompt action upon the proposition.

In December, resolutions were introduced recommending the appointment of a delegation from that body to represent all parts of the State, to proceed to Washington to secure terms of peace. Laid over.

The following is the report of a majority of the Committee of the North Carolina Legislature, to whom were referred a series of resolutions entitled "resolutions to initiate negotiations for an honorable peace:"

The majority of the "joint select committee of the two Houses," to which were referred Senate resolutions No. 4, entitled "resolutions to initiate negotiations for an honorable peace," report the same back to the Senate without amendment, and recommend that they pass.

The majority of the committee believe that while every effort is being made to increase and strengthen the army by the most severe drain upon the people, for men and means, these extreme requirements should be accompanied by some manifestations of an effort and desire to secure an honorable peace by all other legitimate measures.

Commissioners heretofore tendered have been refused by the United States upon the pretext that their reception would imply a recognition of the Confederate Government, as preliminary, and that in case of a failure to agree upon a treaty such recognition would nevertheless stand. These resolutions seek to remove this objection by appointing commissioners on the part of the States, whose civil existence and authority have never been denied; but, at the same time, to make their tender and all powers dependent on the action and adoption of the President. It is not proposed that these commissioners derive any powers from the States, but only that they be tendered by the President for a peace conference, he giving to them such powers and instructions as he may deem necessary and proper.

JOHN POOL, Chairman.

A. C. COWLE.

D. F. CALDWELL.

1865, January 11—In the House of Commons, Mr. SHARPE introduced the following resolutions:

Resolved, That State sovereignty is the principle on which North Carolina and the other States withdrew from the United States Government; and, therefore, the States comprising the Southern Confederacy are sovereigns, and that the Confederate Government is only the agent of the States, and subject to their control.

Resolved, further, That the States in their sovereign capacity have the right to take up the question of peace or war, and settle it without consultation with the President of the Southern Confederacy or of the so-called United States.

On motion of Mr. CRAWFORD, of Rowan, these resolutions were laid on the table—ayes 52, nays 50.

January 19—In the House of Commons, Mr. HANES submitted a preamble and resolution on the subject of a general convention of the Confederate States, the former attributing oppressive and unconstitutional laws, which have been passed from time to time, to irresponsible representatives from States which have no constitunents upon whom the laws passed by them can operate; the latter reading as follows:

Resolved, That the joint select Committee on Confederate Relations be instructed to frame and bring in a bill forthwith, calling a convention of the people of this State, or submitting the question to them, so as to enable them to assemble in convention should a majority of them desire to do so, for the purpose of so amending the Constitution as to provide that hereafter the representatives of any State or States whose territory is in the hands of the enemy, so that the Confederate laws cannot be enforced therein, shall not, during the continuance of such occupation by the enemy, be permitted to vote upon any question of legislation, but shall have only such rights as are allowed to delegates in the territories of the Confederate States, and of considering such other amendments as said three States shall concur on suggestion.

Resolved, further, That State sovereignty being the principle on which North Carolina and other States withdrew from the Federal Union, the States comprising the Southern Confederacy are sovereigns, and the Confederate Government is only their agent and subject to their control, and the States in their sovereign capacity in general convention assembled have a right to negotiate peace with the Government of the United States without consultation with the President of the Confederate States.

Mr. HANES followed in a long argument in support of his resolutions, at the close of which, on motion of Mr. PERSON, they were laid upon the table—yeas 58, nays 39.

Mr. SMITH, of Johnston, introduced a bill to call a convention of the people, which passed its first reading and was referred to the Judiciary Committee. It declares that the present condition of the country demands that the sovereign people of this State should assemble in convention to effect, if possible, an honorable termination of the present war, and provides that an election shall be held on the 13th of February, 1865, the vote to be "convention," or "no convention;" that if the majority of the votes cast be for the convention, such convention shall be held in the city of Raleigh on the second Monday of March, and consist of one hundred and twenty delegates.

VIRGINIA.

[From the Richmond Examiner, Jan. 13.]

1865, January 12—In the House of Delegates, Mr. MILLER introduced a long series of peace resolutions for the appointment of five commissioners, and to declare for an armistice, a national convention, and an honorable peace through State action. The following debate took place:

Mr. TOMLIN moved to indefinitely postpone.

Mr. MILLER. I would ask the yeas and nays on that motion. I hope the House will come to the record on this question. I do not commit the House in this proposition to the policy of reconstruction, to which I am opposed as is to be seen by the resolutions. The question is an important one, and its discussion now was not contemplated. I think it would be more appropriate to consider it in secret session.

Mr. PENDLETON. I hope the gentleman from King William [Mr. Tomlin] will modify his motion to the simple proposition to lay the preamble and resolution on the table. There are some things in the resolutions I am not prepared to vote against; such, for instance, as that which proposes to mitigate the horrors of war. But, at the same time, I denounce the cardinal objects of the resolutions as foreign to the honor, welfare, and dignity of Virginia, putting, as it does, the State in a revolutionary position, severing her connection from that of the Confederate States. The proposition is, in fact, that she secedes.

Mr. MILLER. The gentleman is mistaken as to any such proposition being in them.

Mr. PENDLETON. I would be glad, then, if the gentleman will state their meaning. To my mind they are firebrands, thrown into our midst at one of the closest and most critical periods of the war, and I denounce them as unworthy of Virginia; yet I prefer that they be laid upon the table, in order to see what in them is good and what evil, and to see if the good may not be put to some account, and the bad, which forms the spirit of them, and for which I denounce them, eliminated.

Mr. MILLER. Upon conference with gentlemen not entirely opposed to the resolutions, I will consent to withdraw them.

[Numerous objections to permit their withdrawal were made, and the expression "dispose of them at once and forever" was repeated in various parts of the House.]

Mr. ANDERSON. If this was the first movement of the kind which that gentleman [Mr. Miller] has made in this House, I would consent to let him withdraw his resolutions. But a year ago he threw a similar firebrand into this House; and when the motion was made to dispose of it, as is proposed to dispose of this, even the gentleman himself [Mr. Miller] did not have the hardihood to vote against its indefinite postponement. His name cannot be found, sir, on record against the postponement of his own proposition. What is his object now, after his first effort met with such a signal repulse that he himself shrank from resistance? These resolutions are similar and responsive to propositions which have been made in other States by the party which, under the cloak of peace, are attempting to destroy the Confederacy. Every man who, under the cloak of peace, comes forward with propositions of that kind, must be viewed as prepared to submit. Yes, sir, submit. For there can be no other terms. The Secretary of State of the United States has said that the South can only have peace by laying down its arms; and as to this favorite proposition of State conventions, he, the United States Secretary, has said, we cannot open communications with you, because we would sacrifice our position in regard to your doctrine of the superiority of State sovereignty over the Constitution of the United States. It is important to act promptly in this matter, and to give no countenance to this mischievous, and, I believe, treasonable party.

The yeas and nays being called, the motion to indefinitely postpone was adopted. Yeas, 101; nays, 2—Messrs. Miller of Lee, and Smith of Russell.

January 20—In the House of Delegates Mr. DOUGLAS offered the following joint resolutions:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Delegates of Virginia in General Assembly convened, That the State of Virginia, having entered into the present contest with the United States, and made common cause with the confederates to uphold and defend their rights and liberties from a common danger, is ready and anxious for the return of peace whenever the same can be obtained on terms honorable and just alike to herself and them, and in a manner calculated to secure for all time the precious objects for which we are contending.

Resolved, That the Legislature, representing the sentiment of Virginia, desires the constitutional department of the confederate government to avail itself of every favorable indication to negotiate for terms of peace; yet we solemnly deprecate any irregular action in the premises, either in the shape of a congressional commission, or other way, as revolutionary and dangerous in character, violative of the faith mutually pledged by the States to each other in the adoption of the confederate constitution, by distracting and dividing the minds of the people, to weaken our power of resistance, disintegrate these States, and place the people of this State especially at the mercy of the common enemy.

Mr. MARSHALL moved that the rules be suspended in order that the resolutions might be placed on the secret calendar. He thought the resolutions should be considered in secret session. In reference to these resolutions he had something to say which he would not like to say in open session.

Mr. DOUGLAS opposed the motion to place the resolutions on the secret calendar. Such a disposition of them would defeat the object which he had in view. He wished to see the resolutions adopted, and go forth as the views of this Legislature. He desired to put his heel on every irregular attempt to negotiate terms of peace either in the shape of a congressional commission, by separate State action, or otherwise. Such schemes, in his estimation, would lead to a disintegration of States and the overthrow of the government which the people have instituted.

Mr. ARMSTRONG thought it best that the resolutions should be considered in secret session.

Mr. COLLIER was in favor of discussing the resolutions in open session. He wanted the people to know what their representatives were doing, and what were our opinions.

The motion to suspend the rule with a view of transferring the resolutions to the secret calendar was disagreed to, and it was laid aside.

January 26—In the House of Delegates,

Mr. SMITH, of Russell, sent to the clerk's desk and caused to be read a series of resolutions deploring the war and looking to the attainment of peace by the arbitrament of diplomacy and negotiation, the sword having failed. The resolutions, after much discussion, were indefinitely postponed.

March 9—In the House of Delegates, the following debate occurred on the proposition for a State Convention:

On motion to suspend the rules for the reconsideration of the vote by which the bill conferring constitutional power upon the General Assembly was lost, Mr. HUNTER, of Berkeley, obtained the floor in opposition to the proposition to reconsider the vote.

The discussion already had upon the subject had had, he thought, dangerous and pernicious effects. He hoped the vote would not be reconsidered; that the bill would be left to sleep the sleep of death. Mr. BUFORD, of Pittsylvania, hoped the House would arraign itself upon the question fair and square without prejudice; he thought no harm could come of a Convention. The time might come when legislators would not find themselves behind the people in this matter. He was willing to trust the people and the people should be willing to trust their legislators. Mr. SHEFFY, (Speaker), with Mr. Kelley in the Chair, spoke in opposition to the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill to clothe the Constitutional Assembly with constitutional powers was lost. If two evils were proposed, he would choose the least—the straight-out Convention. He did not understand that there was to be any difference in powers to be conferred upon either body. True, the legislature could not touch the bill of rights nor unite the powers of legislature, executive and judicial. If anything was contemplated by a convention, it was looking to the severance of Virginia's connection with the Confederacy and opening of new and separate negotiations with the treaty-making power of the North. Once open this flood-gate and you will let loose a current that will sweep with desolation the last hope of freedom from this continent. Had we not rather bear those ills we have than fly to others that we know not of? How long will it be after this convention is called before a cry will go forth and reconstruction or no reconstruction become the watchword of these dangerous times? No harm to trust the people, as gentlemen say, but it is a terrible harm for Virginia to lead off in the expression of distrust for the general government. People will say, if the army will say it, that Virginia is preparing to cast loose from the body of her Confederate Union. Our enemy will say that Virginia is preparing to leave the sinking ship and to take to her jolly-boat. The speaker never would with his voice advocate a call for a convention, legislative or straight-out. If other States fly madly from their sphere like erratic rockets to blaze a while, and then die out in eternal night forever, let them fly; but let Virginia be one of those calm, fixed stars, veiled sometimes in cloud and tempest, but indestructible as the firmament from which it shines. Virginia must never perish thus.

Mr. STAPLES, of Patrick, interrupting the Speaker, appealed to the House. He had never said that a convention was to prepare Virginia for the dissolution of her co-partnership in the Confederate Union.

Mr. SHEFFY, continuing, said it was now too late to do this thing. The ship of State is upon the rapids, and if the helmsman cannot guide the ship she must be dashed to pieces. It was no time now to change front; no time to seek a hiding-place from the tempest of war. If we are to sink, let us sink where we stand, and go down with our ship with one triumphant shout of defiance, with the flag of Virginia—"Sic Semper Tyrannis"—floating over us.

Mr. BURWELL, of Bedford, was going to stick to the ship till she struck or run ashore; then he would build a raft of the fragments and see what could be done. He favored a convention, vested in the Legislature.

Mr. ROBERTSON, of Richmond, said that only when our armies were overthrown, the Confederacy torn limb from limb and State from State, would he give his vote or consent to go into convention. Even up to the last extremity, the honor and integrity of Virginia demanded that she should stand firm. If legislators be of the opinion that a convention is demanded, they should withdraw themselves from the possible imputation of being candidates for its membership.

Mr. STAPLES obtained the floor, when Mr. BOLDIN called for the order of the day. The consideration of the tax bill and the question under debate was postponed, and a resolution from the Senate extending the session twenty-two days from Tuesday next taken up.

ALABAMA.

November, 1864—This preamble and resolution were submitted by Mr. PARSONS and debated:

Whereas ABRAHAM LINCOLN, as President of the United States, and commander-in-chief of the army and navy thereof, and the friends and supporters of his administration, have declared that negotiations for peace cannot be entertained except on a basis of restoration of the Union in its territorial integrity and the abolition of slavery, and that the existing war must be prosecuted until the men of these Confederate States are compelled to submit to these terms or are subjugated, and, if necessary to secure this end, exterminated, their lands confiscated, and their women and children driven forth as wanderers on the face of the earth:

And whereas the re-election of ABRAHAM LINCOLN to the office of President of the United States is advocated by many, if not all of his supporters upon these grounds, and that there is no other way to terminate the war, insisting that there is no disposition on the part of the people of these States to enter into negotiations for peace, except on the distinct admission of the separate independence of these States as a basis:

And whereas, at a recent Convention held in the city of Chicago, a numerous and powerful party has declared its willingness, if successful, to stop fighting and open negotiations with us on the basis of the Federal Constitution as it is, and the restoration of the Union under it: now, therefore—

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Alabama in General Assembly convened, That we sincerely desire peace. If the aforesaid party is successful, we are willing and ready to open negotiations for peace on the basis indicated in the platform adopted by said Convention—our sister States of this Confederacy being willing thereto.

For further action, see page 456.

GEORGIA.

In November, 1864, these resolutions were offered by Mr. LINTON STEPHENS:

The General Assembly of the State of Georgia do resolve that the independence of the Southern Confederate States of America, based upon the constitutional compact between the sovereign States composing the Confederacy, and maintained through nearly four years of gigantic war, justly claims from the world its recognition as a rightful fact.

2. That all the States which composed the late American Union, as well those embraced within the present United States as those embraced within the Southern Confederacy, are what the original thirteen States were declared to be by our fathers of 1776, and acknowledged to be by George the Third of England—independent and sovereign; not as one political community, but as States, each one of them constituting such a "people" as have the inalienable right to terminate any Government of their former choice, by withdrawing from it their consent, just as the original thirteen States, through their common agent, acting for and in the name of each one of them, by the withdrawal of their consent, put a rightful termination to the British Government, which has been established over them with their consent.

3. That the sovereignty of the individual States is the only basis of permanent peace on the American continent, and will, if the voice of passion and war can once be hushed, and reason allowed to resume her sway, lead us to an easy and lasting solution of all the matters of controversy involved in the present lamentable war, by simply leaving all the States free to form their political associations with one another, not by force of arms, which excludes the idea of "consent," but by a rational consideration of their respective interests growing out of their natural considerations.

4. That as the very point of controversy in the present war is the settlement of the political association of the States, no treaty of peace can be perfected consistently with the sovereignty of the individual States, without State action on the part of at least those States whose preference may justly be regarded as doubtful, and have not yet been expressed through the appropriate organs; and therefore opposition to all State co-operation in perfecting a peace cannot be consistent with a desire for its establishment on a basis of the sovereignty of the States.

5. That we hail with gratification the just and sound sentiment coming from a large and growing party in the North, that all associations of these American States must be voluntary, and not forcible, and we give a hearty response to their proposition to suspend the conflict of arms, and hold a convention of States to inaugurate a plan for permanent peace.

6. That the appropriate action of such a convention would be not to perform any agreement or compact between States, but only to frame and propose a plan of peace; and the assembling of such a convention, for such a purpose, would be relieved from all possible constitutional objection by the consent of the two Governments; and with such consent, the proposed Convention would but act as comissioners for the negotiation of peace, subject to the ratification of both Governments, and in all points involving the sovereignty or integrity of the States, subject also to the ratification of the particular States whose sovereignty might be so involved.

7. That we respectfully, but most earnestly, urge upon our own Government the propriety and wisdom of not only expressing a desire for peace, through the Presidential messages and Congressional manifestoes, but of making, on all suitable occasions, and especially just after signal successes of our arms, official, open, and unequivocal offers to treat for peace, through the medium of a convention of States, leaving our adversary to accept our offers, or by rejecting them, to prove to his own people that he is waging this unnatural war, not for peace nor the good of his country, but for purposes of the most unholy and dangerous ambition.

On motion, two hundred copies were ordered to be printed.

* In Wisconsin, 3,163 votes for Lincoln, and 1,729 votes for McClellan electors were rejected for informality, and 418 scattering votes were cast, so that the total vote should have been 148,749.

† This State was entitled to three electors, but one dying before the canvass was concluded, but two votes were cast in the Electoral College.

‡ In Vermont, a large army vote was returned too late to be counted.

§ In the camps of Kentucky soldiers within that State, the army vote was included in the general canvass.

¶ No army vote was received until too late for the canvass.

¶ The Kansas soldiers' vote was 2,867 for Lincoln and 543 for McClellan; not canvassed on account of being received too late.

✎ President LINCOLN's estimate, page 558, was but 129 less than the exact result!

NOTICES.

A FEW TESTIMONIALS OF THE FIRST EDITION ARE GIVEN:

From Senator Sherman.

U. S. SENATE CHAMBER,
WASHINGTON, March 12, 1865.

DEAR SIR: I have carefully examined your Political History of the Rebellion, and take great pleasure in commending its accuracy and completeness. You have condensed in a comparatively small space all the material political facts of the rebellion, and have provided a very good index. Your book is not only valuable as a convenient reference for dates and events, but as a substantial contribution to the history of our time.

Very truly, yours,

JOHN SHERMAN.

Hon. EDWARD MCPHERSON.

From Representative Cox.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
WASHINGTON, February 10, 1865.

MY DEAR SIR: Allow me to bear my testimony to the value of your political and historical compendium. I have had occasion to test its accuracy, and find that it is not only a great labor-saving manual, but a full and truthful account of the great causes and events connected with these wonderful years of our Republic. I trust that your research and care may be abundantly rewarded by a discerning public.

With respect,

S. S. COX.

Hon. EDWARD MCPHERSON.

Hon. THOMAS D. ELIOT, in the New Bedford (Mass.) Mercury, of May, 1865: "It is the most exhaustive digest of political facts and Congressional action which has been prepared. It is an admirably condensed history, and an enlarged edition will find a cordial welcome."

North American Review, January, 1865: "Of great value for reference and consultation, for it contains a vast mass of material, judiciously selected, compactly arranged, and conveniently classified, carefully printed, and provided with a lucid table of contents and a good index. It will be found a desirable, almost an indispensable, supplement to the methodical histories of the Rebellion."

Harper's Magazine, November, 1864: "No one who has not occasion to use such a work for constant reference can appreciate the admirable manner in which this has been executed."

American Literary Gazette, October 1: "It is exceedingly difficult to give a correct idea of the great value of this book in anything short of an elaborate review. * * The library, public or private, or the public man, who is without Mr. McPherson's history, will lack one of the most valuable and reliable sources of information."

New York Tribune, September 17: "It is beyond comparison the fullest and most lucid compilation of propositions, votes, acts, &c., &c., in Congress, Military Orders, &c., &c., (Confederate as well as Union,) that was ever made."

New York World, September 20: "A full, accurate, and clear compilation."

New York Times, October 10: "We assure all who have occasion to study the events of the current history of the country that they will find it a storehouse of information, which they cannot procure in so compact a form elsewhere."

New York Post, October 11: "It is every way a work deserving of the warmest commendation, as being the most complete yet compact compilation of facts and documents on the subject of which it treats, that has yet appeared."

Philadelphia Press, September 21: "He has shown not merely industry, but judgment and ability in collecting, condensing, and properly arranging his materials. * * The copious and exact index makes the book invaluable, because most readily accessible for reference."

Philadelphia Age, September 21: "It is a complete synopsis of Federal and Confederate political history since 1860. No question or matter of importance is omitted."

Philadelphia North American, September 22: "One of the most valuable political digests which have been published in this country for a long time."

Philadelphia Inquirer: "A copious, accurate, and valuable contribution to our national history."

Philadelphia Sunday Dispatch, September 25: "A work of reference which no politician nor citizen who desires to be well posted in the affairs of the nation can do without."

Philadelphia Ledger, September 28: "As a work of reference and material for the future historian, it is invaluable."

Philadelphia Evening Telegraph, October 26: "No one who takes any interest in the great events which have for four years convulsed our land should neglect to peruse with care this really valuable work."

Philadelphia Evening Bulletin, October 27: "It more than fulfils the expectations that were raised concerning it. We must express our admiration of the zeal, intelligence, and industry shown in the preparation of this work."

Baltimore American, September 26: "We can hardly refer to another instance of such successful condensation as this book exhibits. It requires no puffing to attract purchasers."

Washington National Intelligencer, August 26: "In no other work can they find the materials of history so faithfully compiled, so copiously selected, and so judiciously arranged. To all students of history, to journalists, to publicists, and to intelligent readers of every class, it will be an invaluable repository of facts and memoranda relating to the eventful times in which we live."

Washington Chronicle, September 2: "It is the most thorough work of the kind we have ever seen. A volume like this saves an immensity of labor to the legislator, the editor, and the public speaker, as well as to the historian."

Boston Advertiser, December 15: "The limits presented to the compiler have been used to extraordinary advantage, and for reference we know of no single volume approaching in value to this."

Boston Traveller, December 15: "No other work yet published is equal to it either as an authority or for thoroughness and completeness."

Boston Post, February 21, 1865: "We have given it a careful examination, and believe it is a very valuable companion for the student of the rebellion. The arrangement of the matter is admirable, and this, in connection with the index, greatly facilitates investigation."

The Methodist, April 15, 1865: "Mr. McPherson had a hard task before him, and he has done it well. His history is by all odds the most valuable work of its kind yet published. * * We think his the most feasible and sensible plan of writing the history of the rebellion."

London Athenaeum, January 7, 1865: "As far as we have been able to test it, the book is an accurate and thoroughly honest repository of historical data; and in that light, we doubt not, it will, in the course of a few years, be esteemed by writers and students of all countries and all parties."

A STANDARD WORK ON THE REBELLION.

M c P H E R S O N ' S POLITICAL HISTORY OF THE REBELLION,

WITH A
COPIOUS CHAPTER ON THE CHURCH AND THE REBELLION.

From November 6, 1860, to April 15, 1865.

The Second Edition of this valuable and popular Work gives all the matter in the first, carefully revised, with the addition of an Appendix, containing the Church Chapter, and bringing the History down, through the late Presidential Canvass and the last Session of the Union and the Rebel Congress, to the death of President LINCOLN, and the overthrow of the Rebel Administration.

Among its chief contents, are these:

- I. The Various STATE PAPERS of the Period—both Executive, Legislative, and Judicial—classified according to dates and subjects.
- II. A Record of the proceedings in the rebellious States between the Presidential election of 1860 and the breaking out of the war, including the important Official Papers produced by the Secession movement.
- III. The Action of the last Congress of President Buchanan's Administration, with a Statement of each Proposition of Adjustment offered, AND THE VOTES THEREON, in Congress, the Peace Conference, and other Adjustment Organizations.
- IV. The Constitution of the United States, and that of the Rebel States, with the points of difference.
- V. President LINCOLN's First and Second Inaugural Addresses, his Various Annual Messages, and all other papers relating to the War and its Issues.
- VI. Congressional, Executive, and Judicial Action respecting the Arrest of Citizens, and the Writ of Habeas Corpus.
- VII. Laws, Decisions, and Votes upon Confiscation and Sequestration.
- VIII. The WHOLE RECORD upon proposed Compensated Emancipation, and upon the policy of Emancipation.
- IX. All proposed Amendments to the Constitution of the United States; and the Votes upon that for the EXTINCTION OF SLAVERY both in Congress and the various State Legislatures.
- X. All other Votes, Orders, and Action respecting every other phase of the multiform Slavery Question, both in the Union and the Rebel Congress.
- XI. The Military Legislation of the Period, together with the Orders of the Military respecting Elections, Impressment of Property, Occupancy of Churches, &c.
- XII. The Niagara Falls and Hampton Roads Peace Negotiations, and all Congressional and Legislative Action proposed or taken on the subject of Peace.
- XIII. The Action of Congress, the Executive, and the Military relating to the vexed, and still unsettled, Question of Reconstruction.
- XIV. The Diplomacy, and the Financial Movements of the Period.
- XV. Full lists of the Union and Rebel Administrations.
- XVI. The National Conventions at Cleveland, Baltimore, and Chicago, with the Platforms, Nominations, and Acceptances of the candidates of each.
- XVII. The Correct Vote at the Presidential Election of 1860, and of 1864.
- XVIII. The Church and the Rebellion—giving the Action of each Denomination since 1861 on the State of the Country; the action of the Churches in the Rebel States; the relations of the Military to the Churches in the Border and the Insurrectionary States; and the Reconstruction of Churches.
- XIX. Original Records from the Office of the Judge Advocate General, illustrating the operation of Emancipation in the Southwest, and the character of the Rebellion.

The work may be justly said to be a MAGAZINE OF FACTS, arranged in logical order, or grouped in natural harmony, and contains an exhaustive Index, which makes reference to both names and subjects ready and easy.

IT IS THE MOST THOROUGH, ACCURATE, IMPARTIAL, AND COMPLETE COMPENDIUM OF THE REBELLION WHICH HAS YET BEEN PUBLISHED, AND COVERS THE WHOLE OF PRESIDENT LINCOLN'S ADMINISTRATION.
